Tour Reveals Potential Of Livestock in Bootheel

By LEO SCHADE

A Missouri Livestock Association district tour, sponsored by the Sikeston Chamber of Commerce, brought out more than 75 stockmen and breeders Friday.

Jerry Aufdenberg, chairman of the Chamber livestock committee, was in charge of the tour, assisted by Phil McGill, co-chairman.

On the tour and program speakers were Dave Kelley, livestock specialist, University of Missouri extension center, Portageville; Dr. Lyle Naegle, Allied Mills research department, Chicago; Dr. John Massey, livestock department, University of Missouri, and Dr. Lawrence Davidson, assistant state veterinarian, Springfield.

Opening the tour at the Scott County Milling Company, milling of feed was explained by Lee Austin Bowman, president. The company manufactures more than 50 types of feed, and employs a staff of 65-70 persons. Storage bins consist of 28 bins with a capacity of 18,000 bushels each, and 16 with a capacity of 22,000 bushels each, for a total of about 1,500,000 bushels. The tour also included the loading and unloading of grain, sacking, mixing and storage.

The tour of the C. J. Stancil cattle farm near East Prairie was conducted by Dave Kelley, who pointed out that Mississippi county had a high potential for cattle raising. The Stancil project has an annual gross of $300,000.

The seven Bootheel counties could produce a half million head at a net profit of $10 per head, for an added $5 million profit to the area, or a $600 million gross.

The county alone produces almost 60,000 acres of corn for feed, and the feeding program would increase the corn value by 20 cent a bushel.

The William Depro and Connie Mac Sells swine farm near Matthews is arranged to carry out a 100-brood sow program, and at this time has a herd of 30 sows. The hog raising goes through three projects, the weaning stage, then to a feeding pen for four or five months up to 125 pounds, and finally on another lot near Matthews until market time.

At 6 p.m. the tour ended at the Herman Smith arena, where Dr. Naegle, Dr. Massey and Dr. Davison addressed the group.

Dr. Negle pointed out that the average beef consumption of an individual in 1950 was 145 pounds, and by 1960 was raised to 161 pounds, and by 1970 it would be 170 pounds.

"Today," he said "beef efficiency was now 80 per cent, and hog at 57 per cent. By giving a 2 per cent animal shrinkage, a 5 per cent better conversion, and 3 per cent less time to market, would double the profit for the livestock raiser."

Naegle added that with a proper feeding diet, corn costs of $1.20 per bushel on beef yearlings could net $16.40 while $1.40 corn price would bring $18.40.

On the Stancil farm it was pointed out that 600 to 700 pounds of beef were being produced each day, and that 10 days ago 15 head were sold at 27 1/2 cents a pound. The average cost in feeding cattle was 24 1/2 cents a pound.

Dr. Massey outlined the hog program, explaining that with proper farrowing care with an average of eight pigs per litter, a 12 per cent return can be made, while with nine pigs it would be raised to 22 per cent.

Dr. Davidson pointed out the proper care on vaccination, with calves to be vaccinated between four and seven months. He said that the state inspection department hoped to stop using modified vaccine by 1972.

"In vaccinating for hog cholera, he said, "we will pay for those when we start a count on your herd."

A SWINE FEEDING PROGRAM by Bill Depro and Connie Mac Sells on the feeding lot north of Matthews was included on the tour. Sells is shown with a portion of their 300 brood sows.

U.S. Air Base at Da Nang Damaged Heavily by Communist Rockets

SAIGON (AP) — The mighty U.S. air base at Da Nang was reeling today from a Communist rocket attack that left 8 Americans dead, 173 wounded and 42 airplanes crippled or wrecked at a cost of $80 million.

It was the worst punishment inflicted on the U.S. base which has been hit twice in the past five months.

Earlier, 13 Americans had been reported killed, but five Marines at first presumed dead were accounted for.

The sprawling 1,600-acre base on South Vietnam's northern sea coast, launching pad for many of the bombing raids on North Vietnam, was shut down immediately after the attack. Crews went out to repair one badly cratered 10,000-foot runway and sweep debris off of another.

The Communists fired for 45 minutes early today from two positions 4.3 miles southwest of the huge base. Their deadly aim left little doubt the rockets had been well zeroed-in in advance.

Six F4C Phantom jets, each worth nearly $2 million, were destroyed and 10 more were heavily damaged. Two Marine F8 Crusader jets and three Air Force C130 cargo planes were wrecked in the five-minute Communist barrage of 120mm and 140mm rocket fire Friday.

It was the third raid on the base in the last five months and, said one U.S. spokesman, "the worst."

The deadly accurate attack, apparently an effort to cripple the U.S. air assault on North Vietnam, also wrecked four Air Force enlisted men's barracks. Seventy of the 150 wounded were kept in the hospital.

Fifteen planes parked at a corner of the base received minor damage from flying shrapnel, said Air Force Col. Robert Maloy of Coral Gables, Fla., commander of the base's 366th Tactical Fighter Wing.

U.S. officers estimated that 50 rockets were fired, some 120s and some 140s. The 140mm rocket is the largest in the enemy arsenal.

Planes en route to Da Nang were diverted to other bases in South Vietnam and Thailand.

U.S. officials said five of the American servicemen killed were Marines and eight were airmen. Of the 70 hospitalized, about 40 were Marines, the others airmen.

The Viet Cong executed a jailbreak Friday night 20 miles south of Da Nang. The guerrillas began by firing 30 mortar rounds at the provincial jail at Hoi An. Then about 60 of them charged the jail with satchel charges and freed 1,220 prisoners.

A police superintendent was killed and 5 policemen and 29 Vietnamese civilians were wounded. Most of the escapees were being held as suspected Viet Cong. About 190 were recaptured.

A flagless enemy trawler was run aground along the South Vietnamese coast off Cape Batangan, 340 miles northwest of Saigon, by five U.S. naval vessels. Navy officials said the 120-foot, steel-hulled trawler was trying to infiltrate ammunition and supplies to Communist units ashore.

It was the eighth trawler intercepted since U.S. warships began the coastal surveillance campaign known as Operation Market Time in February 1965.

Late reports said the trawler was burning fiercely and emitting numerous secondary explosions, indicating hits on ammunition stores and fuel.

In another development, the United States offered a reward of 50 taels of gold— worth about $5,000 in Vietnam— to any North Vietnamese who helped a downed American flier escape to freedom. The offer was made in a drop over North Vietnam of 16 million leaflets signed by U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker.

Other major developments included:

The 42,000-ton U.S. aircraft carrier Oriskany returned to "Yankee Station" in the Gulf of Tonkin to launch air raids against North Vietnam after an absence of nearly nine months. The Oriskany was heavily damaged last October 26 — the day President Johnson visited South Vietnam — by a fire which took the lives of 43 of her officers and men and wounded 16 more.

U.S. pilots flew 94 bombing missions over North Vietnam Friday. One plane was lost to enemy ground fire, the 607th announced combat loss of the war. In the raids, the American planes concentrated on rail yards and sidings in the Hanoi and Haiphong areas and flew strikes on a rail ferry complex near Thanh Hoa which damaged 15 rail cars.

Marines Eager To Test Good Neighbor Policy

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) - The U.S. Marines came to Miami Beach today, hoping to get better acquainted with representatives from 56 countries.

The Marines are official escorts for the Miss Universe contestants at Sunday night's coronation ball. The winner will be crowned tonight.

Sixty Marines, some fluent in the languages the girls speak, were chosen from over 200 men who volunteered for the chore. All are tall.

"These beauties tend to be long-stemmed," said Maj. Fred St. Clair, the leader of the Leathernecks who drew escort duty. "We have a few short men for the Oriental girls but most of the men are over six feet tall."

All are bachelors between 21 and 25.

Miss Germany and Miss Ireland were most in demand in the preference list the men filled out.

Latest Troop Plea May Send 100,000 More Men to Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. forces in Vietnam probably will be beefed up by 80,000 to 100,000 men, mostly combat troops, to bring the American troop strength there to between 540,000 and 550,000 within a year, say Pentagon military sources.

The prospect in the wake of Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's recent visit to Vietnam and Gen. William C. Westmoreland's conferences here after McNamara's return is for the increase in authorized U.S. strength to total about 60,000 or 70,000 men.

This is the equivalent of two divisions plus their support. It represents the lower range of alternative proposals offered by Westmoreland, the U.S. commander in Vietnam.

Before these units are prepared for movement, some 20,000 to 30,000 other troops will be shipped to Vietnam over the next three months to fill out the long-standing authorization of 480,000 men.

Like the bulk of reinforcements to follow later, these men will be chiefly in combat type units.

The largest of the outfits earmarked to go within about 90 days is the Army's new 198th Infantry Brigade, activated in May at Ft. Hood, Tex. The 198th numbers 5,600 men.

Artillery battalions, helicopter companies and similar outfits also will be included in the 20,000 to 30,000-man increment.

Although the later reinforcements, to be sent during the remainder of the 1968 fiscal year, are spoken of in terms of division forces, it is likely they will move to Vietnam in lesser formations, probably brigades and smaller units.

The Army could draw brigades out of its existing forces in the mainland United States and Hawaii, form entirely new units, or follow a combination of these courses.

Since the major Vietnam buildup began in mid-1965, the Army has created one new division and four independent infantry brigades.

The new 9th Infantry Division and three of the brigades have been in battle in Vietnam for some time.

One controlling factor in the pace of the buildup is availability of equipment.

McNamara's statement that there will be no extension of the one-year tour of duty in Vietnam nor "any significant impact on current draft calls" suggests he has placed a limiting framework around the extent of the immediately foreseeable commitment of U.S. forces to Vietnam.

Westmoreland made clear Thursday he foresees a greater ratio of combat to support troops in the buildup just ahead.

He told a White House news conference that, as a result of a two-year development of a big logistical base, "We are now in a position where, for every man that is deployed, we will get a double return in combat power."

McNamara raised questions earlier this week about whether the ratio of support troops to combat forces is topheavy and he has called for studies to reduce what he called waste and inefficiency in using resources already in Vietnam.

Military men contend an unusually large percentage of construction and other support troops where needed in connection with the massive buildup because there were practically no facilities existing in Vietnam to handle the huge volume of American troops.

Six Treated For Injuries

Six persons were treated Friday at the Missouri Delta Community hospital emergency room as the result of accidents.

Area Scouts To Jamboree

Seven Southeast Missouri Boy Scouts and Explorers will leave Thursday for the XII World Jamboree at Farragut State Park, Idaho.

The jamboree will be held Aug. 1-9 and scouts from nearly 100 nations will participate.

While the seven scouts are attending the jamboree, the Southeast Missouri Council will carry on a local program with the jamboree theme, "For Friendship."

About 10 million scouts around the world will hold special local events this year to celebrate the 60th year of the scouting movement.

J. C. Newcomer, council commissioner, Bloomfield, will serve as a Jamboree scoutmaster in charge of the seven area representatives attending.

The scouts are Brad Whatley, post 54, Kiwanis Club, Gideon; Joseph K. Russell, Troop 10, First Baptist church, Cape Girardeau; James B. Holifield, Troop 72, Kiwanis Club, Bloomfield; James A. Kinder III, Troop 3, Centenary Methodist church, Cape Girardeau; Charles Rapp, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau; James A. Summitt, Troop 182 Cardwell Rotary Club, Cardwell, and Don Rice, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau.

The area scouts will travel as part of a contingent from Region 8, which includes Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

Bridge Spans Win Coast Guard Approval

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Coast Guard Friday approved clearance distance between spans of the proposed bridge over the Mississippi River between Caruthersville, Mo., and Dyersburg, Tenn. The action brings construction of the bridge nearer.

Rep. Robert A. Everett, D-Tenn., said the matter now goes to the two states so they can make permit applications.

The bridge, to be constructed as part of the interestate highway system, will be financed 90 per cent by the federal government and 10 per cent by the two states.

The Coast Guard notified Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., it has approved clearance distances of approximately 900 feet for the downstream channel and 550 feet for the upstream channel, as had been worked out in conferences with officials of the agency and the two states.

Strike Shuts Down Copper Industry

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The nation's copper industry was virtually shutdown today after contract negotiations affecting about 37,000 union members broke down.

The Big Four of the copper industry— Kennecott, Phelps-Dodge, Anaconda, and American Smelting and Refining and numerous smaller western copper producers all were affected. Union officials called it "an orderly shutdown."

More than 80 per cent of the workers are with the United Steelworkers of America, which recently merged with the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Injuries Fatal to Hayti Woman

Mrs. Odessa W. Edwards 29, of Hayti, died at St. Francis Hospital early today of injuries suffered Wednesday night in a traffic accident that killed two other persons.

One of the woman's twin 5-year-old daughters, Jeanette, and the driver of the truck with whom they were riding, Charles Mosley, 61, of Cape Girardeau were killed. The other twin, Rosette, was hurt.

Authorities said Mosley lost control of his truck while passing a larger truck on I55 near Benton and when he slowed the vehicle, it was hit from the rear.

Two persons were injured in an accident on highway 25, three miles north of Malden last night at 9:35 p.m.

Herschel Davenport, 48, Dexter, and Carroll McGowan, 32, Bernie, passengers in a 1966 Chevrolet, driven by Edgar Lee Moore, 26, route three, Dexter, were injured when the Moore car attempted to pass a 1967 Ford, driven by Reginia Wayne New, 46, route two, Malden.

The Moore car struck the rear fender of the New car, and the Chevrolet ran off the shoulder and overturned, the highway patrol said.

Davenport was taken to the Dunklin County Memorial hospital, Kennett, with possible head injuries, and McGowan, with possible back injuries.

Moore was given a summons by the patrol.

Doyle D. Williams, 43, New Carlisle, Ohio, driver of a 1967 Chevrolet, received broken ribs in an accident Friday at 9:20 a.m. on U.S. 60, 10 miles west of Sikeston.

A 1967 Ford pickup, driven by Billy Kelly, 19, Essex, failed to yield right-of-way at a stop sign and ran into the Williams car, troopers said. Kelly was given a summons by the highway patrol for failure to yield the right-of-way.

Williams was taken to the Missouri Delta Community hospital in Sikeston.

One of the worst fires in the nation's history occurred Oct. 9, 1871, when a forest in Peshtigo, Wis., burned resulting in 1,152 deaths.

Rail Official Predicts Strike Will Hit West Coast Lines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The official spokesman for railway management predicted today that a strike against all lines serving the West Coast will start tonight.

J. E. Wolfe said, "I can say with assurance on reliable information that all 22 roads serving the Pacific Coast will be tied up one minute after midnight" by six shopcraft unions.

Leaders of the unions representing some 137,000 workers refused Thursday to extend their voluntary no-strike pledge after a Senate-House conference recessed Monday without reaching a decision on a bill designed to avert a strike. Union executives later reaffirmed their decision to rescind the pledge as of midnight tonight.

Wolfe told a reporter, "Unless something is done promptly the nation's economy will be brought to a halt quickly."

Wolfe said that although the predicted walkout would hit directly only the western lines, railroads and industry in many parts of the country would inevitably be affected.

An official of one of the unions said he had no knowledge of an impending strike against major lines.

Joseph W. Ramsey, vice president of the AFL-CIO International Associated of Machinists, said, "I haven't heard a thing from any of our general managers" and that "everything is silence" at his headquarters here.

Ramsey reaffirmed the opposition of the leadership of the six unions to wildcat strikes but added, "I can't guarantee what will happen."

Government and industry sources had indicated earlier they thought any strike would be against only a few major lines, rather than all 90 per cent of the nation's railroads involved in the wage dispute.

White House press secretary George Christian, quoting President Johnson as saying "a strike at this time would have grave consequences," said Friday "the government is going to do everything it can" to prevent a strike.

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara met earlier Friday with congressional leaders of both parties to advise them of the situation.

The other unions involved represent sheet metal workers, boilermakers, electricians, carmen and firemen and oilers. They are demanding a 6.5 per cent pay hike this year and 5 per cent next year, plus 12.5 cents an hour in each of the two years for skilled workers. They now average $2.94 an hour, with skilled workers earning up to $3.05 an hour.

The railroads have offered a 6 per cent hike for an 18-month agreement, plus a five-cent skill increase.

POOR CHARLIE SAYS!

LEE JOHNSON, CITIZEN EMPLOYEE, FRIEND

Lee Johnson, a gentleman of color, passed to his reward Monday morning in Chicago while visiting a niece.

Lee Johnson was a man of character, honest, industrious, a member of the Board of Deacons of the West End Baptist Church, energetic and for many years a beloved employee of the DAILY STANDARD.

He served us in the capacity of sterotyper and pressman. When we first purchased our 24 page Goss Rotary press, Lee Johnson helped to erect it and was one of its operators until his retirement.

We are sincerely grieved at his passing. What more can one man say of another than that he was considered a member of the family and loved and trusted as a brother.

The president of a major investor-owned utility company stated before the House Committee on Agriculture that approval of a proposed federal electric bank would mean eventual nationalization of America's investor-owned utility industry. On one side would be the numerous rural electric cooperatives fully established, generally unregulated, virtually untaxed, having to pay only 2 per cent to 4 per cent for an unlimited amount of money, able to combine, and able to absorb other utilities' systems. On the other side would be the investor-owned electric utility companies, heavily regulated and taxed and having to pay over 6 per cent for the use of money.

THE BIG GET BIGGER, THE SMALL GET SMALLER

In the printing business as in farming and everything else, the big continue to get bigger, the small get smaller.

As a result of the ruling of the Federal Reserve banks that after September 1 all checks must carry the individual number of the bank on which they are issued, and that in a special metallic ink so that electronic machines can sort them properly, thousands of printing shops throughout the United States will lose hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of business in check and warrant printing. None but the extremely large companies are equipped with the special machinery and inks to do the job. What the Federal Reserve Banks save by using the new method, the printer and consumer will probably lose to the big companies. They'll get richer, virtually have a monopoly on such business, and can charge whatever price they want to charge. Because of such changes, it becomes increasingly more difficult for the smaller business establishment to exist.

The printing business is only a small drop in the bucket compared to changes in other locally established and locally owned and operated businesses of long standing. A few years back, the Mexico Refractories was absorbed into the Kaiser Aluminum. Last week, the Stamper Co., at Moberly became a part of General Mills, while A. P. Green at Mexico was absorbed into U.S. Gypsum. All are giants in their particular field and gain even more giant stature by these consolidations.

This is an age of Giantism.

Not all teen-age drivers "scorch out" from a stoplight to see how much rubber they can lay in a peeling, screeching race to prove who has the "hot go-machine."

Some, as a matter of fact, cruise the highways rather deliberately and slowly in a serach for safety, and in an effort to rescue stranded motorists.

The Gearlords, for example, a teen-age car club in California, could more aptly be named "Knights of the Good Turn," because its young members prowl the roads doing good deeds.

In one such instance, a husband braved the night to get medicine for his sick wife. On the way, his car broke down and he could not repair it.

Members of the Gearlords came to the rescue and, while they couldn't fix the car, they did push it nine blocks to a garage.

Then they helped the man find an all-night drugstore.

The relieved husband, medicine in hand, offered the youths some money, which they refused. Instead, they gave him a card, and said:

"If you want to show your appreciation, tell your local police chief we helped you, and tell your friends not all teen-agers are bad."

The card, bearing a picture of an armored knight, said: "You have been assisted by the Gearlords Car Club, Altadena."

According to California police, there are about 250 such clubs in the southern part of the state, with a total membership of about 4,000 teenage boys. Each one is interested in improving the image of the teen-age driver - and constructively achieving that goal.

Police say these young men "are a wonderful bunch of kids" who promote the idea of safe driving, assist other motorists in trouble, and organize such social activities as dances, beach parties and car rallies.

To which "Driver's Seat can only add: "Let there be more clubs of this kind, stocked with the same kind of young men, bringing chivalry and the standards of King Arthur's court to the hazards of today's roads."

You may need such assistance one day.

Status symbol seekers create phonies - where there were none before

Back in grandma's day bustles were worn to make fannies Whistle - Worthy, whether they were or not. (-and I've never seen one that wasn't.)

Also there were "rats" to puff Grandma's hair up and out. The reason? I don't know.

Along about the same period, men's jacket shoulders were paded. Every male suddenly looked like John L. Sullivan.

But let's jump from here to our time.

The most revolutionary of all was the bra - the falsies. Since then we males have never known what we're up against.

When better - to - do folks in our; neighborhood bought television sets, we put up antennas before we became financially able to buy a TV set. We couldn't bear to embarrass our children.

Even now, 'tis said, folks without air conditioners in their cars, drive with windows rolled up summer and winter. That's pretty darn phony, you gotta admit, but how about this younger set of phonies that install trailer hitches on the rear bumper of their cars, even though they don't own a boat.

Dimension of deceit has been with us a long time. Back in medieval times there were Crusaders who carried chastity belt keys on their armors, even though they didn't have a girl friend. (How about that for phonyism?)

BUSY BRAT

A naughty little girl was put in a clothes closet for punishment. For 15 long minutes there wasn't a sound. Finally the stern, but anxious mother opened the door and peered inside.

"What are you doing in there?" she asked.

From the darkness came the emphatic answer, "I'm thpittin' on your new hat, I'm thpittin' on your new dreth, I'm thpittin' on your new thatin thlippers and . . . and . . ." There was a breathless pause

"And what!" cried the mother.

Came the voice of vengeance, "Now I'm waiting for more thpit!"

CARE OF CLOTHES: If you wear foulard breast-pocket handkerchiefs, warn the person who washes them not to press creases when folding the handkerchiefs. It spoils the casual look . . . Since today's popular washable corduroy attracts lint, it should be washed wrong side out -- and never with linty items as terry towels. And warm water, rather than hot, leaves the pile softer.

FATHERLY NOTE

A young man who wished to get married wrote his father, asking his advice. He received the following reply:

"My Dear Son:

"Your mother and I would like to see you happily married. She tells me to point out the many advantages -- cozy fireplace, chair, slippers, pipe with your darling wife beside you. I am proud to know, my boy, you have decided to settle down.

"P.S. Your mother has just left the room. Keep single, you idiot! -- Father

The fact-finding youngster faced his mother one day asking: "Didn't you tell me the stork brought me?"

"Why, yes, dear."

"And I weighed nine pounds?"

"Yes."

"Well, for your information," said the boy, "the stork hasn't the wing-spread to carry a nine-pound load!"

POP WAS FUSSY

When the college's football squad was called out for the first practice session of the season one of the aspirants was so fleet of foot that he made the others look like turtles. The coach asked him how he developed such incredible speed.

"I used to catch jackrabbits on my pop's ranch," he explained.

"But," the coach pointed out, "a lot of others boys here claim that they did the same thing. Still they're not nearly as fast as you."

"Wal, my pop is pretty fussy about the rabbits he eats," the boy elaborated. "I had to run along side of-em and feel to see if they were fat enough for pop before I caught them."

THE CONSTRUCTIVE ALTERNATIVE

"Businessmen have no practical choice but to insist that social problems be given the same careful analytical treatment that business uses in solving its own problems," says the head of a large oil company. In pursuing this objective, he believes that businessmen should become increasingly involved in what can be called the "strategy of the constructive alternative." In response to "creative federalism", this strategy can offer "creative competition" between business and government to serve the national interest.

To an ever increasing extent, top business executives across the country are becoming aware that continuing expansion of costly government welfare programs, and a tendency to shift responsibility for the welfare of large groups of citizens to the shoulders of centralized authorities and bureaus will inevitably lead to the loss of freedom and private initiative. In effect, the rise of the welfare state has presented a competitive challenge that must be met with the same kind of resourcefulness and imagination that are required to develop a great industry.

As times goes on, these farsighted leaders propose to show that the social problems of our time can be solved within the framework of self-government and the private enterprise system.

CARE OF CLOTHES: Hundreds of mufflers are lost daily by being stuffed in a sleeve (from which they can easily fall out). Run the muffler through the loop hanger in the neck of your coat, and keep it that way when parking it. It'll be safe... When you wash leather gloves, use a hair shampoo or soap with lanolin to help restore the natural oil of the skins.

Capital punishment never stops murder and other violence, one man told the other. Hanging didn't stop men from stealing horses in the old days. No, the other guy answered, but it sure made them think twice before doing it again.

Doc. Duncan Says

Radio says a couple of the way out laws enacted by the last August body in Jeff City are being challenged.

Now if somebody had the "Guts" to challenge that unethical, unamerican, unconstitutional oil law enacted by the second special session of the 73rd general assembly we all might get started on the road back to government for and by the people.

P.S. It's doubtful many people know about said oil law.

Inside Labor

By Victor Riesel

NO INSTANT INTEGRATION

Behind-the-Scenes Battle on Negro Issue Hits $10 Billion Project

Washington, D.C.: -- It was high noon on Thursday, June 22, when 18 powerful men gathered in a White House office to await the President for a discussion on how to spend $10 billion.

They were not all friends, these men. Some were bankers and heavy construction men. Some were labor leaders -- George Meany and Walter Reuther, hardly a Damon and Pythias. One was Whitney Young, executive director of the Urban League, who only the day before had learned of a gory plot to assassinate him by sniper fire.

The President had summoned them to work under industrialist Edgar Kaiser to rip the slum out of scores of cities -- as swiftly and cheaply as possible.

At 12:24 exactly, Mr. Johnson strode in, shook as many hands as he could and spoke for 20 minutes. In effect he said that the construction unions, represented by the laconic, but affable Joe Keenam, secretary of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), would have to cooperate with the heavy construction contractors and with the Negro leaders.

Union membership rosters would have to be opened to Negro and other minority workers. Automatic modern equipment for composite high speed construction would have to be accepted by the labor leaders. Builders would have to deal with union officials on union scales.

That's what the President meant when he told the 18-man committee to get together "but don't squabble in public, let's not quarrel, let's get this work done."

Then the full committee, some still merely stiffly polite with each other, went to lunch at the Madison Hotel. There they agreed to meet in Chicago on July 20.

There they will be distant from the Presidential heat and may not again melt easily -- though the committee chairman, Edgar Kaiser, will do his best. It may not be enough. The construction union chiefs say you can't build new cities on emotion. Skills are needed. There can't be instant integration, say they.

The most steadfast opposition to opening the big unions to all comers on the civil rights front springs from the building and construction union's elder statesman, Peter Schoemann, head of the plumbers and pipefitters.

"You have read in past reports in our . . . Journal," he told his followers recently, "that I have said 'Racial Equality? Yes!' On another occasion I said 'take them in provided they are qualified!' It does not therefore follow that our local unions are supposed to roll over and play dead and get some kind of inferiority complex every time a federal agency comes around with some wild scheme for going out and recruiting members of the minority groups."

In the same speech he asserted that "likewise we may have to face a sustained campaign to break down the skilled mechanical trades, at least on many urban renewal jobs, and parcel out our work piecemeal to unqualified and hastily trained residents of what we used to call slums, but which it is more fashionable in the present day to call ghettos.

"These are all very real and very serious challenges and we have absolutely no choice except to face them head on with all the intelligence and all the courage we can bring to our job as electrical trade union officials."

In effect, Shoemann's position is that there can be no "integration by statistics." This he told a high level government peacemaking committee three days before the 18-man committee met with the President.

The peace conclave met on June 19 in the Labor Dept. with Under Secretary of Labor Jim Reynolds who, according to one present, "had a big tub of honey" but nothing was settled.

The labor delegates to the integration peace conference were members of the Building and Construction Trades Department, including its chairman Neal Hagerty and such men as the Carpenters' Maurice Hutcheson, Peter Fosco, secretary-treasurer of the Laborers and Gordon Freemen of the IBEW. They dueled mostly with Assistant Secretary of Labor Stanley Ruttenberg, in charge of manpower and, not too long ago, the head of research for the AFL-CIO.

The positions were fixed. No one took anyone's trench. Schoemann spoke for the rest when he said integration can't be measured by the number of Negroes in a given number of unions. Statistics, No. Skills, Yes.

At the end of the session it was agreed that both sides had talked squarely to the other and that at least the construction unions would be informed in advance of any action the government would take on the integration front where federal money and projects were involved.

None of this broke into the open. But it is the spectre which stalks the billion dollar uprooting of the nation's slum clearing.

At least for the moment the President has succeeded in keeping the squabbling behind the scenes -- just to add a little cool to the long hot summer.

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- It hasn't been announced, but President Johnson has made a very courageous move in regard to Red China.

He has come to the conclusion that the United States cannot ignore the largest country in the world population - wise, especially now that China has the hydrogen bomb; and that it must become a member of the community of nations.

The President came to this decision despite the power of the China lobby in this country. Ever since the McCarthy era it has been worth a politician's life to advocate friendly relations with China. Gen. George Marshall, former chief of staff and the man who did most to win World War II, was castigated as a traitor on the senate floor by both McCarthy and Sen. William Jenner, R-Ind., because he advised that we cooperate with the Chinese Communists. He suggested a coalition communist cabinet with Chiang Kai-Shek.

McCarthy was so vitriolic against three career diplomats who had advised the same policy and fired them. Since then few members of the state department have been willing to stick their necks out regarding China except Roger Hilsman, assistant secretary of state under Kennedy, who has now written a revealing book on our Far Eastern relations.

For Johnson to make an affirmative decision regarding Red China, therefore, will win him few votes in the coming election.

MAURER'S MISSION TO PKING

Nevertheless he decided -- first, because China has nuclear weapons; second, because it is the controlling factor regarding North Vietnamese peace -- that the United States should change its policy.

Therefore when Premiere Ion Gheorghe Maurer of Romania came to Washington for a White House talk, Johnson informed him that the United States was ready to change its policy. The President further requested Maurer to go to Peking and inform Mao Tse-Tung that he, Johnson, believed China must become a respected member of the community of nations.

The President knew that Romania, unlike some of the other Communist states, had maintained close ties with China. He had an extraordinarily frank and friendly talk with Maurer, who was the only communist foreign minister to come to Washington for a conference. Romania had been working with Denmark to try to find a formula for peace in the Near East.

When Maurer went to Peking last month, the press reported that he was trying to patch up relations between the Soviet and China. Actually, however, he went to Peking on the mission for President Johnson.

A detailed report on his visit has not yet arrived from Bucharest. The President does not expect any change overnight. But he has made the first gesture and it is one of the most important foreign policy decisions of his career.

THE GUN LOBBY

One clue as to why the National Rifle Association is able to get $2,717,300 annually from the American taxpayers to practice target shooting comes from a look at the house appropriations committee which votes the money.

Chairman of the subcommittee on military construction and second in command of the defense subcommittee is good old Rep. Bob Sikes, D-Fla., who is also a major general in the army reserves and one of the rootin' tootin' advocates of guns in the hands of hunters, rifle association members and others.

On the senate side the man who writes the gun legislation is Roman Hruska, R-Neb., a passionate friend of the National Rifle Association. Hruska is now pushing a new gun bill which is a very weak substitute for that proposed by both the administration and the two Kennedy brothers, who want to guard against future assassinations.

Hruska's gun bill is about what Sen. Tom Dodd proposed prior to Nov. 22, 1963 -- namely, the control of mail order sales of hand guns. After Nov. 22, 1963, Nick Katzenbach, then deputy attorney general, stepped in to propose stringent controls in the trade of all guns. Bobby Kennedy, then attorney general, was too shaken up at the time to do very much.

Sen. Dodd sent along with this new legislation. But almost four years have now lapsed and no bill has passed congress.

Although the Hruska bill in the senate is woefully inadequate, Sen. Teddy Kennedy, D-Mass., will probably urge that it be ok'd by the senate judiciary subcommittee, so it can be amended on the senate floor.

The danger is, however, that the full senate judiciary committee won't let it reach the senate floor. On the judiciary committee are such dyed - in - the - wool champions of free gun transportation as Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.; Jim Eastland, D-Miss.; John McClellan, D-Ark.; Sam Erven, Jr., D-N.C.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., confided to Sarah McClendon that he asked LBJ to come to the rescue of Sen. Tom Dodd during the censure debate. LBJ refused. Earlier the White House made it clear that Johnson when vice president went to Connecticut to speak for Dodd only because Johnson thought it was a campaign fund - raising affair, not a testimonial dinner . . . Alf Landon, the ex-governor of Kansas who ran against Roosevelt in 1936, has proved himself much more of a statesman than the voters of 1936 realized. Now that the internationalization of Jerusalem is under discussion, plus other international cities, it turns up that Alf Landon back on Oct. 25, 1945, proposed: "Nations must seriously consider internationalizing the few hitherto key spots of the world."

An Editor's Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

THE MISSING THOUSANDS

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND -- The 4-year-old girl, ill with typhus, had spent only one night in the Ukranian hospital when it was hurriedly evacuated ahead of onrushing German troops. All the records were lost. Somewhere on the road Hitler's panzers overtook the trucks carrying the patients and for four years thereafter little Emilie starved on precarious charity.

At the end of the war a French officer found the waif and brought her home to be raised as a member of his family. Emilie loved her foster home and thought of herself as French. But as her marriage approached she wondered more and more about her real parents. Finally, she wrote to the Central Tracing Agency of the Red Cross in Geneva.

Emilie didn't have many clues to offer. She knew her first name and those of her brother and sisters. But the agency already had the answer. A man and wife now in West Germany had long had a letter on file telling how they had brought their Emilie to the hospital, how the hospital had vanished and of their long years of agonized searching.

So Emilie had two sets of parents at her wedding.

IN A bleak "temporary" building on the grounds of the International Red Cross headquarters here the musty files contain many heartbreaks and some happy endings. The Central Tracing Agency is nearly 100 years old. You can thumb through the yellowed lists of prisoners in the Franco - Prussian war of 1870. Every American POW of World Wars I and II had at least one card in the file.

During World War II 1,200 workers labored over 50,000 communications a day, most of them inquiries about missing persons. The files are bewildering. There are stacks of Kims and Rhees, dating from the Korean war. There are 50,000 Meyers, 50,000 Mullers or Millers and 160 ways of spelling John, including Jean, Johan, Ivar, Ivan, Han, Hans, Joop, Joannis and Schani.

IN SUCH a huge collection there are, naturally, fantastic coincidences. But none can beat the case of Pvt. Pascale di Cataldo Riggi of the Italian Marine Battalion "San Marco" who was born in Catalnissetta on Sept. 15, 1924, and captured at Metline on May 5, 1943. The only trouble was that two cards came in on Pascale, giving different serial numbers and different prison camps in Britain.

As it turned out there were two Pascale Riggis from the same outfit, born the same day at the same place and captured the same day at the same place. Even their fathers' name were identical.

SINCE THE Russians at the time of World War II had not signed the Geneva Convention and thus gave no information about German prisoners and battle dead, and since the Germans replied in kind, there are even today about 300,000 missing persons from both armies. Time dims hopes and anguish gradually subsides into a dull ache. But there remain wistful dreams that men who vanished a quarter of a century ago will return to their married children and aging wives.

As Allied troops closed in on the German concentration camps, hurried efforts were made to obliterate the terrors. Those wretches who could not conveniently be gassed and burned were driven out onto the roads, and the camp records were, in most cases, utterly destroyed. Even today among the 1,000 requests for information which the Central Tracing Agency receives each week there are pathetic efforts to find those whose ashes have long been nurturing the gardnes of Dachau and Belsen.

THERE ARE, of course, successes, and this makes it all worth while. There was the Vietnamese child, missing for nine years, who was finally reunited with his mother in far-off Noumea. There were Natalie and Olga, sisters, who escaped from a prison train enroute to Siberia and 22 years later found their sister who had become the wife of an Englishman. And questions half a century old were answered when a Polish family asked the Tracing Agency's help in finding what happened to Nicolas who went to America in 1912.

The agency's files contain some curious communications. There is the cigaret package thrown from a Bulgarian train carrying the names of war prisoners. The Japanese fudged on the Geneva Convention during World War II and would not let Red Cross representatives interview prisoners. But they could shake hands with them. After one such handshake at the prison camp of Shamsuipo the Red Cross man found in his palm a tiny slip of tissue on which, in practically microscopic writing, a British doctor had stated the camp deficiencies.

TO HISTORIANS and strategists, wars are tides to be charted neatly in the calm of retrospect. But to little people caught up in its churning there is little order. The prisoner for whom no records are kept. The apparent orphan taken from the bombed village by a kindly rescue mission. The homecoming soldier who returns to four blackened walls.

With what unbounded optimism did foolish man house his records of missing persons in a temporary building.

FOR THE THIRD time in as many years, the Missouri Conservation Commission has spoken against the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type anti-firearms legislation.

The Commission action at its July meeting followed the reading of a resolution adopted by the Conservation Federation of Missouri. In the resolution, the Federation expressed its opposition to unreasonable firearms legislation and its support of the position taken on the issue by the National Rifle Association.

The Conservation Commission adopted a brief statement to the effect that the department has in the past opposed various forms of the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type proposals to restrict ownership and use of sporting firearms.

The Commission also expressed its support for the Hruska Bill, Senate Bill 1854, which would amend the National Firearms Act of 1934. The amendment would add "destructive devices" to those articles defined as firearms for the purposes of the act, which now pertains only to machine guns and sawed-off rifles and shotguns. The amendment would also revise the procedures for legally obtaining firearms as they are defined in the act.

The Administration-backed Dodd Bill, Senate Bill 1, not only would make the purchase and use of sporting arms much more difficult but would establish registration and licensing procedures that sportsmen fear would lead to even more strict control, or prohibition, in the future, and which would eventually result in curtailment of federal aid to wildlife funds.

Senate Bill 1 was scheduled for hearing in July 1 before the Senate Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency. Senator Thomas Dodd, sponsor of the Dodd Bill, is chairman of the subcommittee.

TWO CONTROVERSIAL SUBJECTS took up most of the conversation at the All-Star game break:

(1) Which teams are going to win the pennants?

(2) Where are the Kansas City A's headed?

Most observers who gathered in conversation were ready to believe that the Cardinals in the National League and the White Sox in the American, the current leaders, are for real.

But no one was conceding either one of them the pennant. In this connection, Cardinal catcher Tim McCarver said he hoped no one took the Red Birds for granted because they weren't doing it themselves.

"I'm happy we're where we are, out in front, at this point," said McCarver, "but there are too many tough teams in our league. The second half is always tougher. We know that we're going to have to keep on going, winning every game we can . . . maybe winning a few more."

Asked to compare the 1967 Cardinals with the 1964 World Champions, McCarver hestitated.

"Overall," he said, finally, "I think we are a little stronger. Even thinking of the great job Kenny (Boyer) and Bill (White) did for us that year, I think we have a bit more power this season. Not much but a little. Orlando Cepeda has been unbelievable. Aside from the pitching, I think he's the key to our success. He's doing it all with his bat."

This was a modest white lie by McCarver, the third best hitter in the National League at the All-Star break, but he was obviously speaking behond himself.

The National League race drew more conversational attention than did the American where the consensus seems to be that the White Sox will go as far as their pitching carries them.

One difference is that there are definite threats to the White Sox supremacy in the American. The Twins are coming on and so are the Tigers, after a slump earlier.

Now that the Chicago Cubs bubble has burst . . . at least temporarily . . . National Leaguers are having trouble settling on a contender, a real challenger to the Cardinals.

"I keep telling myself," one National League said, "that the Cardinals can't stay up there -- but they keep winning consistently. What happens immediately after the All-Star game may be significant. There have been some fatal slumps in late July."

Cincinnati and San Francisco command most of the attention. The resurgence of Ray Sadecki and Mike McCormick, especially the latter, has boomed the Giant stock . . .

The agreement, though, is that it is going to be another solid race to the finish.

WHISPERED RUMORS around All-Star headquarters produced some new developments in the checkered life of the Kansas City Athletics.

Kansas City voters three weeks ago approved a bond issue for the construction of twin stadiums, one for football and one for baseball. This approval was given even though A's owner, Charles Finley, gave no support to the proposal. The future of football in Kansas City is assured. It is not so in baseball.

In fact, spokesmen close to the Kansas City situation concede that they beliee Finley will try again this fall to vacate that area and head for greener pastures. Oakland is the most frequently mentioned moving point, with Milwaukee a more remote possibility.

The lates word, though, is that both of these locations are not included in American League thinking.

"There is not guarantee as yet," a man close to the American League situaton said, "that Finley will be given permission to move. Right now, I'd say that this is touch and go. Finley has no positive assurance that he can move.

"But he will be advised, if he has not been advised already, to steer clear of Oakland and Milwaukee."

"The Braves' owners botched the transfer to Atlanta by some silly maneuvers," the spokesman said, "but there is no arguing that it was necessary to get out of Milwaukee. The Cubs and White Sox are too close and the Twins have grabbed off the fans to the north. The same situation still holds true."

If Finley receives permission to move, where will he go?

"I'd guess New Orleans as the most likely spot," the spokesman said. "The reaction to football there has been great and it's virgin territory for major league ball."

How about a new team for Kansas City? Most people think the city will acquire one if and when Finley leaves. No one will say which team it will be . . .

Cardinals Notch 51st.

Associated Press Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS AP - Orlando Cepeda drives in runs even when he's resting, so he figures maybe he ought to rest more.

The big first baseman wheeled his National League-leading batting average up to the plate in the seventh inning Friday night and pinch-singled in a run as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-1. The Red Birds 51st season victory.

"I came to Red Schoendienst, Cardinal manager after Thursday night's game and asked him for some rest," Cepeda said. "I haven't had any days off and I was pretty tired after the game."

"If we can win games like that," Cepeda laughed, "maybe I ought to ask Red for more rests."

Cepeda's single tied the game and the Cardinals scored the winning run when Dave Ricketts fouled out to Jose Pagan in left field. Julian Javier broke for the plate and when Pagan's throw to catcher Jerry May was high, Javier was Safe.

"I'm really not a very good pinch hitter," Cepeda said. "I think this is only the third pinch hit I've gotten in the majors."

Larry Jaster was happy to see the hit because it meant his sixth win against four losses. But Lou Brock was even happier.

Pittsburgh scored a run in the top of the seventh when Gene Alley singled and came around while Lou Brock played hide and seek with Jose Pagan's single. At the time it looked like the only run loser Tommie Sisk, 7-7, would need.

"Boy," Brock said, "I don't know how many times I grabbed for that ball. I picked up everything but the ball." Then he laughed and added, "I must have dug a hole out there."

If Ed Mathews could call his shots, the Atlanta Braves would be a lot more embarrassed than Juan Marichal today.

"I wish it would have come against the Braves," Mathews said Friday night after smashing the 500th home run of his major league career - a three-run shot off Marichal that carried Houston to an 8-6 victory over San Francisco.

It was the seventh homer of the season for Mathews, who hit 493 in 15 years with the Braves in Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta before being dispatched to the Astros in a winter trade.

The 35-year-old third baseman thus became the seventh member of the elite 500 club, joining the Giants' Willie Mays and the New York Yankees' Mickey Mantle as the only active players who have reached the magic figure.

Babe Ruth heads the all-time list with 714 lifetime homers. Mays has 555, Jimmy Foxx, 534, Ted Williams, 521, Mantle, 512, and Mel Ott, 511.

"Don't ask me how many I hope to hit . . . it was tough enough to get this one," Mathews said after powering the Astrokaufw the fifth victory in their last six games.

Elsewhere in the National League, Cincinnati nipped the New York Mets 1-0 in 10 innings, Atlanta topped Philadelphia 4-2 and Los Angeles downed the Chicago Cubs 5-2.

Mathews connected on Marichal's first pitch following singles by Jim Wynn and Rusty Staub in the sixth inning, giving the Astros a 6-4 lead they never relinquished. Rookie Norm Miller had tagged Marichal for a three-run homer in the fourth, helping foil the Giant ace's bid to become the majors' first 13-game winner.

Although confident he can surpass Ott's homer total this year, Mathews expects to see his own mark eclipsed in the future. "No matter how many homers you hit," he said, "some one else will come along to pass you."

Rookie Gary Nolan of Cincinnati hooked up in a scoreless duel with the Mets' Jack Fisher until the 10th inning, when Tony Perez' bases-loaded single won it for the Reds. Nolan allowed only five hits in gaining his eighth victory in 10 decisions.

Perez, whose 15th inning homer Tuesday night gave the NL All Stars a 2-1 victory over the American League, delivered the winning hit after a two-out walk to Floyd Robinson, a single by Vada Pinson and an intentional pass to Pete Rose filled the bases.

Rico Carty pounded a three-run homer in the first inning and Hank Aaron provided an insurance run with his 23rd homer as the Braves held off the Phillies. Winner Tony Cloninger gave up a first-inning homer to Tony Gonzalez and needed relief help in the seventh.

The Dodgers snapped a four-game losing string behind rookie Bill Singer, who blanked Chicago on four hits until the eighth, when he came up with a tender elbow and gave way to Ron Perranoski. Lou Johnson cracked a two-run double and Al Ferrara homered to pace the LA attack.

Big Red Drills

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Solid hitting by both offensive and defensive linemen was the feature of a one-on-one drill in the St. Louis Football Cardinals' first full workout at Lake Forest, Friday.

Big Red rookies and youngsters went through a half-hour session of contact work with some solid blows being delivered.

"It's hard to really point up anyone," said head coach Charley Winner. "A youngster would get in a good pop one time, then might be beaten on the next. But it was a good session and showed that everyone is ready for contact work."

Chuck Latourette, a rookie punter and defensive back from Rice University, was clocked at 4.65 seconds for the 40 yard dash to lead the squad.

Errors dominated Morley's part of the game as every move seemed to turn into an error.

ONE ATE, ONE LISTENED

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Maury Wills says he had quite an experience rooming with Dodger catcher John Roseboro.

Wills, now a Pittsburgh Pirate, said Roseboro had a favorite hotel in St. Louis.

"Roseboro liked it because he could get a creamed chicken omelette anytime he wanted," said Wills.

"But that was only a starter. He'd begin: 'This is Mr. Roseboro in Room 412. I want a creamed chicken omelette, a 16-ounce steak, three bottles of soda and some ice tea.'

"He'd always ask for some rich dessert and just before he'd hang up, he'd ask me if I wanted anything.

"After hearing him order," said Wills, "I just wasn't hungry."

GOLF AS SCHOOL SPORT

EAST LONDON, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's Gary Player, winner of most of the world's top golf trophies, advocated here that golf should be introduced as a high school sport.

Player said: "There are many boys who are not strong enough to play first team cricket, rugby (football) or get on a school's athletic squad and who consequently tend to get complexes. The other boys tease them and call them 'sissies'. This is wrong.

"These boys could play golf where strength, while it is an asset, is not essential. And we could have inter-college matches."

Official games in South African boys' schools are generally limited to cricket, rugby and tennis. A few schools play soccer.

Program May Help Industry

MEMPHIS, Tenn. -- "The $8 million program approved here would virtually double industry cotton research and promotion and give a mighty boost in our fight for markets," president Russell Giffen declared, following action by trustees of the Cotton Producers Institute.

The institute plans to conduct the projects under a grower-approved program authorizing uniform collection of $1 per bale for cotton research and promotion.

Giffen explained that the CPI program would be the nucleus of a total effort that represents several times the $8 million recommended for 1968.

"It would greatly expand and augment activities by CPI and by others that already are opening up many new opportunities for cotton and its products," he emphasized.

This over-all effort, he noted, includes the National Cotton Council, International Institute for Cotton, U. S. Department of Agriculture, land-grant colleges and private firms interested in cotton research.

Contributing substantially and likely to swell the total still further are matching funds from groups and businesses participating in cooperative research or promotion programs for cotton and cotton products.

The recommendations approved by Cotton Producers Institute for submission to the cotton board call for a budget of $2.7 million for research and $5.3 million for promotion.

The institute will utilize the staff and services of the National Cotton Council to carry out the projects.

Research recommendations cover 10 major areas. These include several of insects, weeds, and diseases; yield/quality; mechanization; processing/handling/marketing; mill finishing/processing; improvements in qualities important to consumers; product development, and cottonseed.

Promotion recommendations call for a substantial increase in CPI national magazine and newspaper advertising, in magazine--retailer projects and in manufacturer - retailer and trade advertising.

Proposed television projects include cooperative campaigns, fashion shows and movies.

Recommendations also covered six major merchandising areas: chain store and mail order, fabric libraries, market-press weeks, fabric development, retail sales training and suppliers and industry.

Cooperative campaign recommendations included increased promotion for cotton cushioning, canvas awnings, tarpulins and tentings and piece goods.

"Say there!" called one intermission smoker to another across a Boardway theater lobby recently. "Aren't you Jean Kerr?" The pale woman grew paler still, and shuddered. "Heavens, no," said Jean Kerr firmly. "No, I most certainly am not!"

The entr'acte drama occurred in the lobby of the theater where Jean Kerr's Mary, Mary was running. Mrs. Kerr's instant denial of identity was not because she's reluctant about owning up to being a celebrity. It was simply, she said later, that "there I was in an old dress with a rip in my sweater and hair in my face -and I don't want anybody to think Jean Kerr looks like that."

Y. A. Tittle of the New York football Giants told of a surprising thing that happened to him when he played his last game for the San Francisco Forty-Niners. The opposition on that day was the Giants, and Y. A. couldn't figure out how he was riddling the Giant defense with pass after pass. After the game he called one of the Giant linemen over and said, "What's the matter with you gusy? You all getting soft?"

"Naw," grunted the burly bone-crusher. "They told us all before the game that you'd just been traded to us and not to lay a hand on you."

During World War II, Adm. Arleigh Burke had a habit of spicing up the covers of his orders with sketches of pretty girls. Adm. Ernest J. King once confronted him. "Just look at this thing. It's terrible. It lacks dignity."

"Have you read Admiral Turner's op - order on the amphibious forces?" asked Burke.

"No," said King. "But you've read ours?" Burke persisted.

"Yes," King owned.

"That's the reason for the pretty girls on the cover," Burke crowed. "All of our op - orders are read. Nobody reads Admiral Turner's." John J. McAlcer

BENTON -- Americans are eating better than ever, and spending a small proportion of their after-tax dollar to do it.

Way back in the 1870's food took 58 per cent of all the consumer earned. Now the figure is 18.2 per cent of disposable income -- the lowest in history.

Consumers now spend less than a nickel of every quarter of their disposable income for food. Of this amount, the farmers get less than 2 cents.

Per capita consumption of meat this year is being estimated at 165 pounds -- including 100 pounds of beef, five pounds of veal, 3-1/2 pounds of lamb and 56-1/2 pounds of pork.

Today's consumer spends 18.2 cents of each after-tax dollar for food. This compares with 29 cents in England, 31 cents in France, 45 cents in Italy and 53 cents in Russia.

In the United States, one farmer or rancher produces enough food and fiber for 35 other people.

The cost of individual food items in terms of labor required to purchase them shows a substantial reduction since 1947. For example, an hour of labor today purchases about 70 per cent more beef and about 75 per cent more pork than it did then.

Today, annual meat expenditures for a family of five takes less than 5 per cent of total disposable income, for which they can purchase 850 pounds of meat --200 pounds more than in 1936. And in 1936, meat purchases took a larger percentage of annual income.

Today's factory worker earns the cost of his monthly grocery basket in less than 37 hours, the smallest number of hours in history. Fifteen years ago it took him 00 hours.

Where does the food dollar go? A big share goes to labor. Of the total cost of moving food from farmer to housewife, age earners in the food industry get an estimated 50 per cent.

SLIME MOLD

There have been a number of inquiries in regard to spots in lawns that have a growth on the grass that sheds a sooty black powder. The cause of this particular growth on the lawn grass is a fungus known as Slime Mold.

It is a primitive type of fungus and is generally regarded as a harmless saprophyte living on decaying organic matter, frequently old logs and leaves. In years when we have a great deal of rainfall and moist, humid weather this mold often grows up the stalks of the grass.

The black bodies that are apparent on the grass blades are the fruiting structures of the fungus. The masses of black powder that are shed when one walks through the area are the spores. These are the structures that provide survival when adverse weather occurs, states Einar W. Palm, Extension Plant Pathologist, University of Missouri.

The mold is made up of a slimy type of material that grows on the ground surface. In wet weather it will proceed up the surface of grass or other vegetation. When the weather conditions become adverse for the new growth of this slimy structure, known as the plasmodium, the fruiting structures are formed.

There are several species of slime mold. We have also had specimens of strawberries with slime mold infections.

The slime molds are not generally considered a serious pest. They are unsightly and undesirable in the yard, or garden and they may alter the activity of the leaves and result in some yellowing of the leaves. They at times predispose plants to invasion by other bacteria or fungi. They usually disappear rapidly as soon as it becomes dry.

Under most conditions slime molds are easily controlled by certain management practices. Generally speaking, removal of the spore material by mowing and/or washing the leaves with a stream of water have been standard recommendations for control of slime molds for many years.

However, slime mold development is favored by wet weather. If the leaves are washed during a prolonged period of high rainfall, this will only serve to spread the mold to previously unifected areas and thus promote a build up of disease.

Leaf washing for slime mold control should be performed only upon termination of humid, wet weather conditions.

When prevailing weather conditions do not permit leaf washing, mechanical removal of spore masses by raking, brushing, or cutting rather closely will reduce the disease. If wet weather persists, slime molds may be effectively controlled by the application of any good turf grass fungicide. Fungicides such as captan, dyrene, thiram, or zineb will be acceptable.

WHEAT AS SUBSTITUTE

Corn has long been recognized as the "king of the cereal grains" for livestock feeding. The cost of corn has risen to the point where consideration should be given to possible substitutes. Wheat, on the other hand, has decreased in price as a result of farm programs and price support changes. This has caused producers to ask when it is feasible to substitute wheat for all or part of the corn in the ration.

The University of Illinois states that wheat is approximately 95 per cent the value of corn. The University of Missouri feels that wheat is 100-105 per cent the value of corn and that they can be substituted on a pound-for-pound basis. A bushel of wheat would be worth about 7 per cent more than a bushel of corn, since it is 4 lbs. heavier.

WHEAT FOR CATTLE

Wheat can be used very satisfactorily as a part of the grain source for feeding cattle, but should probably supply no more than 50 per cent of the concentrate source. Cattle do not like wheat as well as corn and they tend to bloat or go off feed more often when they are fed wheat, in comparison to corn.

Mo. Bulletin 641, "Corn Substitutes for Fattening Cattle," reported a feeding trial involving wheat vs. corn for fattening yearling steers. The best performing group in this test was a group being fed equal parts corn with equal parts wheat as a grain source in the fattening ration.

The poorest gaining group was fed ground wheat as the only grain. They had frequent digestive disturbances and carcasses of relatively low grade.

Wheat should be rolled or coarsely ground for cattle. It should not be too fine or dust.

WHEAT FOR HOGS

Good quality ground wheat makes a very satisfactory feed for swine. Wheat can be substituted 100 per cent for corn in swine rations; however, the substitution should probably be done slowly. It may be wise to substitute approximately 50 per cent wheat for 50 per cent of the corn in the ration and then evaluate the performance obtained at this level before making an additional increase in the percentage of wheat in the ration.

Wheat is approximately 13 per cent C. P. and the question arises if it can be used as the only feed for a swine finishing ration requiring 12 per cent protein. The protein in cereal grains is of poorer quality than the protein in oilmeal products. This is primarily because of a deficiency in certain amino acids.

Therefore, even though wheat alone would provide an adequate crude protein percentage, the ration would still be deficient in some essential animo acids.

A finishing ration of 88 per cent corn and 12 per cent soybean oilmeal will supply adequate amounts of each of the essential amino acids. However, if wheat is used as the only feed in the ration, there will be a deficiency in lysine and methionine.

To correct the amino acid deficiencies, a finishing ration of 90-95 per cent wheat plus 5-10 per cent of a 40 per cent supplement should be satisfactory. Wheat may be self - fed free choice.

What varieties differ a great deal in amount of essential amino acids; therefore, use of averages may result in inaccuracy.

If the percentage protein is reduced in a ration when wheat replaces corn, it should probably be limited to a finisher ration with pigs on pasture and should probably not be more than 2 per cent below the level recommended for corn.

Extra fine grinding should be avoided with meat for hogs as well as cattle.

Wheat is deficient in about the same nutrients as corn for hogs; therefore, approximately the same levels of minerals and vitamins need to be added to a wheat ration (more vitamin A may be needed).

WHEAT FOR LAMBS

Wheat has not been satisfactory a feed as corn for lambs. It has been worth about 85 per cent as much as corn per pound in lamb feed, or 90 per cent as much a bushel.

SUMMARY

Generally speaking, when the price of wheat per bushel is equal to or less than the price of a bushel of corn, wheat should be given consideration as a concentrate source. As indicated previously, wheat is worth about 7 per cent more a bushel than corn, since there are 60 pounds in a bushel of wheat and 56 pounds in a bushel of corn.

However, if you are feeding shelled corn you must take into consideration that wheat should be either coarsely ground or rolled before it is fed to cattle, and also coarsely ground before, it is fed to hogs.

Because of the expense of grinding, wheat and corn become basically equal in value per bushel. If corn is being ground or in some other way prepared for feeding hogs or cattle, then wheat would remain 7 per cent greater in value per bushel than corn.

For example, a local elevator is quoting shelled corn grade no. 2 picked up at the elevator at $1.39 a bushel. The price for wheat in this area ranges from $1.30, to $1.40 a bushel.

With corn at $1.39 a bushel (2.48 a pound) and assuming it can be substituted on an equal basis with wheat, then wheat should be worth $1.49 a bushel as a feed source.

If adjustment is made for the additional protein that wheat supplies, then the price differential would increase even more. Some cattle and hog feeders will harvest wheat, haul it to the elevator, sell it for approximately $1.25 a bushel, and return with a load of corn to feed their cattle or hogs. These feeders need to be aware of the possibility of using wheat instead of corn.

Ann Landers

Life with Father Teenage Problem

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 16-year-old girl with a 42-year-old problem, my father.

I have always been a good student, dependable, honest and hard - working. I have never been in any kind of trouble, and I don't plan on getting into any. I began dating at 15 and I have never broken a curfew or gone anyplace where I should not have gone.

Yet my father does not trust me with a boy no matter who he is. Every time I come home from a date I get the third degree and a lecture. I have heard the same speech at least 50 times. My father thinks all boys become sex maniacs at the age of 16.

I have heard it said that fathers who worry most about their daughters are the ones who chased everything in skirts when they were teen-agers. Is this true? I need your help. --- NO FAITH

Dear Faith: It's a waste of time to speculate about what your father did when he was a teen-ager. The important thing is that he does allow you to date, so be thankful for small favors, Chicken. Listen to his lectures, continue to keep your record perfect and prove him wrong, wrong, wrong, wrong.

Dear Ann Landers: I hope you will print this letter for the woman who has had a good marriage for 10 years but can't get her high school sweetheart off her mind. Her letter was the story of my life.

I got a divorce, gave up two children and thought I was going to live happily ever after with my "great love." The last three years have been hell. I see none of the glamor and romance I was sure was there. I see only a cold, selfish man who leaves me emotionally starved. Furthermore, I had to go to work to keep the bill collectors off our necks. Just sign me --- DREAMER WHO WOKE UP TOO LATE.

Dear Dreamer: I hope the hundreds of women who wrote to tell me that they, too, are eating their hearts out for an old flame will take a page out of your book before they get burned --- as you did.

Dear Ann Landers: Mazie and I have been best friends for years. She began to date Eddie eight months ago. I always admired his sharp mind and wonderful wit. Mazie never treated him right and about six weeks ago they broke up.

When Eddie called me for a date I told him I'd feel like a rat going out with him because of my friendship with Mazie. He assured me that they were kaput, so I said I would have to talk to Mazie myself before I gave him an answer.

When I asked Mazie how she stood with Eddie she told me it was over and I should date him if I wanted to.

Eddie and I have had three dates an we get along beautifully. But yesterday Mazie called and said she made a mistake and she wants Eddie back. I told her I didn't have him in chains and she was welcome to him. Her reply was, "He is too much of a gentleman to dump you. You'll have to dump him."

I want to do the right thing. What is it? --- MISS IN THE MIDDLE

Dear Miss: If Mazie called you, it's a safe bet she also called Eddie. Refuse to play a three-handed game. Continue to see Eddie as long as you enjoy his company -- and make it a rule never to discuss one with the other.

Do you feel ill at ease . . .out of it? Is everybody having a good time but you? Write for Ann Landers' booklet, "The Key to Popularity," enclosing with your request 35¢ in coin and a long, self - addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a stamped, self - addressed envelope.

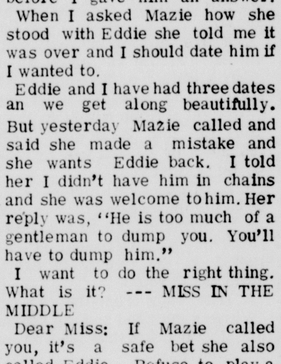

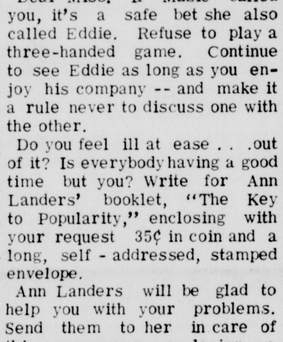

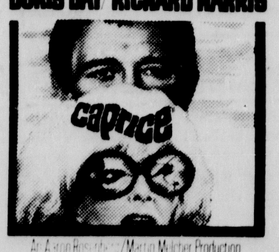

The Prayer
From The Upper Room

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . that they may rest from their labors, for their deeds follow them!" (Revelations 14:13, RSV)

PRAYER: Our Father, we love Thee and rest in Thy love. Grant that we may walk with Thee today and do the work Thou hast given us to do. Help us to so live in Thy presence that we may be glad to hear Thy call some day to come to Thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Armory is a community building in a nutshell. Sikeston needs this building. To get this building Sikeston will have to provide $12,000 sponsors share. Absolutely impossible to get this either out of general revenue or by the issuance of bonds. On account of purchase of new engine no Light Plant funds are available. Sufficient new users of city lights can be secured to provide this $12,000. If you know a better way to get this money let us know.

If You Were the Judge

Bundle of Nerves Results in Lawsuit

By Jack Strauss, LL.B.

Nervous Norton felt shakier than usual and, going to a doctor, received two prescriptions which he took to a drug store to have filled. When he finally received them, one was marked "for external use only" and the other was labled "for internal use only."

A week later, the druggist was as nervous as Norton when he telephoned Norton to report a "slight" error. It seemed that he had inadvertently reversed the labels.

Dropping the telephone like he had just been stabbed, Norton clenched his throat and began to mumble that he was a dead man; that he had drunk the medicine marked "for external use only."

Instead of keeling over, however, Norton sued the druggist for damages.

"Because of his carelessness in mislabeling the bottles," Norton complained to a judge, "I developed an ulcer from fear that I might die. And, with the pain from the ulcer, the fact is I might be better off dead."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make the druggist pay for Norton's ulcer?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that Norton's ulcer did not develop as a result of the druggist's carelessness in mislabeling the prescription. Rather, it developed from being told that the bottles had been mislabeled.

TODAY'S LEGAL POINTER:

Too many people have insurance policies without knowing the extent of their coverage. A person should sit down with his broker and have him explain the policy paragraph by paragraph. If you still do not understand its provisions when he finishes, you should get yourself another broker who can explain it to your complete satisfaction. After all, there's no point in paying for something unless you know what you're getting.

AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION ABC

One in a series of messages to advertisers

No myths or mysteries, just the facts

The finest advertising doesn't have a chance unless it is seen or heard. The circulation of an advertisement is vital to its success. And, circulation is people ...not the number of advertisements printed or anticipated or projected.

No advertiser can afford expensive guessing. Positive proof of circulation should be demanded. Vague generalities should be discounted. Charts, formulas, and promises are not readers, and can lead your advertising off sales target.

The actual circulation figures... verified count... of this newspaper are available through the report of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Exactly how many units of your advertising are delivered into the hands of paying customers? How much do they pay to see your advertising? Where and how is this advertising being delivered?

This is the type of circulation information that helps keep your advertising and advertising budget aimed in the right direction. No camouflage, just facts and figures.

Insist on circulation proof when you buy advertising—be ABC-sure.

A HERD OF STOCK CATTLE was shown on the livestock tour Friday at the C. J. Stancil farm near East Prairie. The herd numbers 150 and the feeding lot is geared to handle 300 head. The herd was purchased at 800-pound weight, and placed on the market from 1,100-1,200 pounds.

Tour Reveals Potential Of Livestock in Bootheel

By LEO SCHADE

A Missouri Livestock Association district tour, sponsored by the Sikeston Chamber of Commerce, brought out more than 75 stockmen and breeders Friday.

Jerry Aufdenberg, chairman of the Chamber livestock committee, was in charge of the tour, assisted by Phil McGill, co-chairman.

On the tour and program speakers were Dave Kelley, livestock specialist, University of Missouri extension center, Portageville; Dr. Lyle Naegle, Allied Mills research department, Chicago; Dr. John Massey, livestock department, University of Missouri, and Dr. Lawrence Davidson, assistant state veterinarian, Springfield.

Opening the tour at the Scott County Milling Company, milling of feed was explained by Lee Austin Bowman, president. The company manufactures more than 50 types of feed, and employs a staff of 65-70 persons. Storage bins consist of 28 bins with a capacity of 18,000 bushels each, and 16 with a capacity of 22,000 bushels each, for a total of about 1,500,000 bushels. The tour also included the loading and unloading of grain, sacking, mixing and storage.

The tour of the C. J. Stancil cattle farm near East Prairie was conducted by Dave Kelley, who pointed out that Mississippi county had a high potential for cattle raising. The Stancil project has an annual gross of $300,000.

The seven Bootheel counties could produce a half million head at a net profit of $10 per head, for an added $5 million profit to the area, or a $600 million gross.

The county alone produces almost 60,000 acres of corn for feed, and the feeding program would increase the corn value by 20 cent a bushel.

The William Depro and Connie Mac Sells swine farm near Matthews is arranged to carry out a 100-brood sow program, and at this time has a herd of 30 sows. The hog raising goes through three projects, the weaning stage, then to a feeding pen for four or five months up to 125 pounds, and finally on another lot near Matthews until market time.

At 6 p.m. the tour ended at the Herman Smith arena, where Dr. Naegle, Dr. Massey and Dr. Davison addressed the group.

Dr. Negle pointed out that the average beef consumption of an individual in 1950 was 145 pounds, and by 1960 was raised to 161 pounds, and by 1970 it would be 170 pounds.

"Today," he said "beef efficiency was now 80 per cent, and hog at 57 per cent. By giving a 2 per cent animal shrinkage, a 5 per cent better conversion, and 3 per cent less time to market, would double the profit for the livestock raiser."

Naegle added that with a proper feeding diet, corn costs of $1.20 per bushel on beef yearlings could net $16.40 while $1.40 corn price would bring $18.40.

On the Stancil farm it was pointed out that 600 to 700 pounds of beef were being produced each day, and that 10 days ago 15 head were sold at 27 1/2 cents a pound. The average cost in feeding cattle was 24 1/2 cents a pound.

Dr. Massey outlined the hog program, explaining that with proper farrowing care with an average of eight pigs per litter, a 12 per cent return can be made, while with nine pigs it would be raised to 22 per cent.

Dr. Davidson pointed out the proper care on vaccination, with calves to be vaccinated between four and seven months. He said that the state inspection department hoped to stop using modified vaccine by 1972.

"In vaccinating for hog cholera, he said, "we will pay for those when we start a count on your herd."

A SWINE FEEDING PROGRAM by Bill Depro and Connie Mac Sells on the feeding lot north of Matthews was included on the tour. Sells is shown with a portion of their 300 brood sows.

U.S. Air Base at Da Nang Damaged Heavily by Communist Rockets

SAIGON (AP) — The mighty U.S. air base at Da Nang was reeling today from a Communist rocket attack that left 8 Americans dead, 173 wounded and 42 airplanes crippled or wrecked at a cost of $80 million.

It was the worst punishment inflicted on the U.S. base which has been hit twice in the past five months.

Earlier, 13 Americans had been reported killed, but five Marines at first presumed dead were accounted for.

The sprawling 1,600-acre base on South Vietnam's northern sea coast, launching pad for many of the bombing raids on North Vietnam, was shut down immediately after the attack. Crews went out to repair one badly cratered 10,000-foot runway and sweep debris off of another.

The Communists fired for 45 minutes early today from two positions 4.3 miles southwest of the huge base. Their deadly aim left little doubt the rockets had been well zeroed-in in advance.

Six F4C Phantom jets, each worth nearly $2 million, were destroyed and 10 more were heavily damaged. Two Marine F8 Crusader jets and three Air Force C130 cargo planes were wrecked in the five-minute Communist barrage of 120mm and 140mm rocket fire Friday.

It was the third raid on the base in the last five months and, said one U.S. spokesman, "the worst."

The deadly accurate attack, apparently an effort to cripple the U.S. air assault on North Vietnam, also wrecked four Air Force enlisted men's barracks. Seventy of the 150 wounded were kept in the hospital.

Fifteen planes parked at a corner of the base received minor damage from flying shrapnel, said Air Force Col. Robert Maloy of Coral Gables, Fla., commander of the base's 366th Tactical Fighter Wing.

U.S. officers estimated that 50 rockets were fired, some 120s and some 140s. The 140mm rocket is the largest in the enemy arsenal.

Planes en route to Da Nang were diverted to other bases in South Vietnam and Thailand.

U.S. officials said five of the American servicemen killed were Marines and eight were airmen. Of the 70 hospitalized, about 40 were Marines, the others airmen.

The Viet Cong executed a jailbreak Friday night 20 miles south of Da Nang. The guerrillas began by firing 30 mortar rounds at the provincial jail at Hoi An. Then about 60 of them charged the jail with satchel charges and freed 1,220 prisoners.

A police superintendent was killed and 5 policemen and 29 Vietnamese civilians were wounded. Most of the escapees were being held as suspected Viet Cong. About 190 were recaptured.

A flagless enemy trawler was run aground along the South Vietnamese coast off Cape Batangan, 340 miles northwest of Saigon, by five U.S. naval vessels. Navy officials said the 120-foot, steel-hulled trawler was trying to infiltrate ammunition and supplies to Communist units ashore.

It was the eighth trawler intercepted since U.S. warships began the coastal surveillance campaign known as Operation Market Time in February 1965.

Late reports said the trawler was burning fiercely and emitting numerous secondary explosions, indicating hits on ammunition stores and fuel.

In another development, the United States offered a reward of 50 taels of gold— worth about $5,000 in Vietnam— to any North Vietnamese who helped a downed American flier escape to freedom. The offer was made in a drop over North Vietnam of 16 million leaflets signed by U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker.

Other major developments included:

The 42,000-ton U.S. aircraft carrier Oriskany returned to "Yankee Station" in the Gulf of Tonkin to launch air raids against North Vietnam after an absence of nearly nine months. The Oriskany was heavily damaged last October 26 — the day President Johnson visited South Vietnam — by a fire which took the lives of 43 of her officers and men and wounded 16 more.

U.S. pilots flew 94 bombing missions over North Vietnam Friday. One plane was lost to enemy ground fire, the 607th announced combat loss of the war. In the raids, the American planes concentrated on rail yards and sidings in the Hanoi and Haiphong areas and flew strikes on a rail ferry complex near Thanh Hoa which damaged 15 rail cars.

Marines Eager To Test Good Neighbor Policy

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) - The U.S. Marines came to Miami Beach today, hoping to get better acquainted with representatives from 56 countries.

The Marines are official escorts for the Miss Universe contestants at Sunday night's coronation ball. The winner will be crowned tonight.

Sixty Marines, some fluent in the languages the girls speak, were chosen from over 200 men who volunteered for the chore. All are tall.

"These beauties tend to be long-stemmed," said Maj. Fred St. Clair, the leader of the Leathernecks who drew escort duty. "We have a few short men for the Oriental girls but most of the men are over six feet tall."

All are bachelors between 21 and 25.

Miss Germany and Miss Ireland were most in demand in the preference list the men filled out.

Area Scouts To Jamboree

Seven Southeast Missouri Boy Scouts and Explorers will leave Thursday for the XII World Jamboree at Farragut State Park, Idaho.

The jamboree will be held Aug. 1-9 and scouts from nearly 100 nations will participate.

While the seven scouts are attending the jamboree, the Southeast Missouri Council will carry on a local program with the jamboree theme, "For Friendship."

About 10 million scouts around the world will hold special local events this year to celebrate the 60th year of the scouting movement.

J. C. Newcomer, council commissioner, Bloomfield, will serve as a Jamboree scoutmaster in charge of the seven area representatives attending.

The scouts are Brad Whatley, post 54, Kiwanis Club, Gideon; Joseph K. Russell, Troop 10, First Baptist church, Cape Girardeau; James B. Holifield, Troop 72, Kiwanis Club, Bloomfield; James A. Kinder III, Troop 3, Centenary Methodist church, Cape Girardeau; Charles Rapp, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau; James A. Summitt, Troop 182 Cardwell Rotary Club, Cardwell, and Don Rice, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau.

The area scouts will travel as part of a contingent from Region 8, which includes Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

Latest Troop Plea May Send 100,000 More Men to Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. forces in Vietnam probably will be beefed up by 80,000 to 100,000 men, mostly combat troops, to bring the American troop strength there to between 540,000 and 550,000 within a year, say Pentagon military sources.

The prospect in the wake of Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's recent visit to Vietnam and Gen. William C. Westmoreland's conferences here after McNamara's return is for the increase in authorized U.S. strength to total about 60,000 or 70,000 men.

This is the equivalent of two divisions plus their support. It represents the lower range of alternative proposals offered by Westmoreland, the U.S. commander in Vietnam.

Before these units are prepared for movement, some 20,000 to 30,000 other troops will be shipped to Vietnam over the next three months to fill out the long-standing authorization of 480,000 men.

Like the bulk of reinforcements to follow later, these men will be chiefly in combat type units.

The largest of the outfits earmarked to go within about 90 days is the Army's new 198th Infantry Brigade, activated in May at Ft. Hood, Tex. The 198th numbers 5,600 men.

Artillery battalions, helicopter companies and similar outfits also will be included in the 20,000 to 30,000-man increment.

Although the later reinforcements, to be sent during the remainder of the 1968 fiscal year, are spoken of in terms of division forces, it is likely they will move to Vietnam in lesser formations, probably brigades and smaller units.

The Army could draw brigades out of its existing forces in the mainland United States and Hawaii, form entirely new units, or follow a combination of these courses.

Since the major Vietnam buildup began in mid-1965, the Army has created one new division and four independent infantry brigades.

The new 9th Infantry Division and three of the brigades have been in battle in Vietnam for some time.

One controlling factor in the pace of the buildup is availability of equipment.

McNamara's statement that there will be no extension of the one-year tour of duty in Vietnam nor "any significant impact on current draft calls" suggests he has placed a limiting framework around the extent of the immediately foreseeable commitment of U.S. forces to Vietnam.

Westmoreland made clear Thursday he foresees a greater ratio of combat to support troops in the buildup just ahead.

He told a White House news conference that, as a result of a two-year development of a big logistical base, "We are now in a position where, for every man that is deployed, we will get a double return in combat power."

McNamara raised questions earlier this week about whether the ratio of support troops to combat forces is topheavy and he has called for studies to reduce what he called waste and inefficiency in using resources already in Vietnam.

Military men contend an unusually large percentage of construction and other support troops where needed in connection with the massive buildup because there were practically no facilities existing in Vietnam to handle the huge volume of American troops.

Bridge Spans Win Coast Guard Approval

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Coast Guard Friday approved clearance distance between spans of the proposed bridge over the Mississippi River between Caruthersville, Mo., and Dyersburg, Tenn. The action brings construction of the bridge nearer.

Rep. Robert A. Everett, D-Tenn., said the matter now goes to the two states so they can make permit applications.

The bridge, to be constructed as part of the interestate highway system, will be financed 90 per cent by the federal government and 10 per cent by the two states.

The Coast Guard notified Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., it has approved clearance distances of approximately 900 feet for the downstream channel and 550 feet for the upstream channel, as had been worked out in conferences with officials of the agency and the two states.

Strike Shuts Down Copper Industry

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The nation's copper industry was virtually shutdown today after contract negotiations affecting about 37,000 union members broke down.

The Big Four of the copper industry— Kennecott, Phelps-Dodge, Anaconda, and American Smelting and Refining and numerous smaller western copper producers all were affected. Union officials called it "an orderly shutdown."

More than 80 per cent of the workers are with the United Steelworkers of America, which recently merged with the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Injuries Fatal to Hayti Woman

Mrs. Odessa W. Edwards 29, of Hayti, died at St. Francis Hospital early today of injuries suffered Wednesday night in a traffic accident that killed two other persons.

One of the woman's twin 5-year-old daughters, Jeanette, and the driver of the truck with whom they were riding, Charles Mosley, 61, of Cape Girardeau were killed. The other twin, Rosette, was hurt.

Authorities said Mosley lost control of his truck while passing a larger truck on 155 near Benton and when he slowed the vehicle, it was hit from the rear.

Two persons were injured in an accident on highway 25, three miles north of Malden last night at 9:35 p.m.

Herschel Davenport, 48, Dexter, and Carroll McGowan, 32, Bernie, passengers in a 1966 Chevrolet, driven by Edgar Lee Moore, 26, route three, Dexter, were injured when the Moore car attempted to pass a 1967 Ford, driven by Reginia Wayne New, 46, route two, Malden.

The Moore car struck the rear fender of the New car, and the Chevrolet ran off the shoulder and overturned, the highway patrol said.

Davenport was taken to the Dunklin County Memorial hospital, Kennett, with possible head injuries, and McGowan, with possible back injuries.

Moore was given a summons by the patrol.

Doyle D. Williams, 43, New Carlisle, Ohio, driver of a 1967 Chevrolet, received broken ribs in an accident Friday at 9:20 a.m. on U.S. 60, 10 miles west of Sikeston.

A 1967 Ford pickup, driven by Billy Kelly, 19, Essex, failed to yield right-of-way at a stop sign and ran into the Williams car, troopers said. Kelly was given a summons by the highway patrol for failure to yield the right-of-way.

Williams was taken to the Missouri Delta Community hospital in Sikeston.

One of the worst fires in the nation's history occurred Oct. 9, 1871, when a forest in Peshtigo, Wis., burned resulting in 1,152 deaths.

Rail Official Predicts Strike Will Hit West Coast Lines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The official spokesman for railway management predicted today that a strike against all lines serving the West Coast will start tonight.

J. E. Wolfe said, "I can say with assurance on reliable information that all 22 roads serving the Pacific Coast will be tied up one minute after midnight" by six shopcraft unions.

Leaders of the unions representing some 137,000 workers refused Thursday to extend their voluntary no-strike pledge after a Senate-House conference recessed Monday without reaching a decision on a bill designed to avert a strike. Union executives later reaffirmed their decision to rescind the pledge as of midnight tonight.

Wolfe told a reporter, "Unless something is done promptly the nation's economy will be brought to a halt quickly."

Wolfe said that although the predicted walkout would hit directly only the western lines, railroads and industry in many parts of the country would inevitably be affected.

An official of one of the unions said he had no knowledge of an impending strike against major lines.

Joseph W. Ramsey, vice president of the AFL-CIO International Associated of Machinists, said, "I haven't heard a thing from any of our general managers" and that "everything is silence" at his headquarters here.

Ramsey reaffirmed the opposition of the leadership of the six unions to wildcat strikes but added, "I can't guarantee what will happen."

Government and industry sources had indicated earlier they thought any strike would be against only a few major lines, rather than all 90 per cent of the nation's railroads involved in the wage dispute.

White House press secretary George Christian, quoting President Johnson as saying "a strike at this time would have grave consequences," said Friday "the government is going to do everything it can" to prevent a strike.

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara met earlier Friday with congressional leaders of both parties to advise them of the situation.

The other unions involved represent sheet metal workers, boilermakers, electricians, carmen and firemen and oilers. They are demanding a 6.5 per cent pay hike this year and 5 per cent next year, plus 12.5 cents an hour in each of the two years for skilled workers. They now average $2.94 an hour, with skilled workers earning up to $3.05 an hour.

The railroads have offered a 6 per cent hike for an 18-month agreement, plus a five-cent skill increase.

Tour Reveals Potential Of Livestock in Bootheel

A Missouri Livestock Association district tour, sponsored by the Sikeston Chamber of Commerce, brought out more than 75 stockmen and breeders Friday.

On the tour and program speakers were Dave Kelley, livestock specialist, University of Missouri extension center, Portageville; Dr. Lyle Naegle, Allied Mills research department, Chicago; Dr. John Massey, livestock department, University of Missouri, and Dr. Lawrence Davidson, assistant state veterinarian, Springfield.

The county alone produces almost 60,000 acres of corn for feed, and the feeding program would double the profit for the livestock raiser."

Naegle added that with a proper feeding diet, corn costs of $1.20 per bushel on beef yearlings could net $16.40 while $1.40 corn price would bring $18.40.

On the Stancil farm it was pointed out that 600 to 700 pounds of beef were being produced each day, and that 10 days ago 15 head were sold at 27 1/2 cents a pound. The average cost in feeding cattle was 24 1/2 cents a pound.

Dr. Massey outlined the hog program, explaining that with proper farrowing care with an average of eight pigs per litter, a 12 per cent return can be made, while with nine pigs it would be raised to 22 per cent.

Dr. Davidson pointed out the proper care on vaccination, with calves to be vaccinated between four and seven months. He said that the state inspection department hoped to stop using modified vaccine by 1972.

"In vaccinating for hog cholera, he said, "we will pay for those when we start a count on your herd."

The William Depro and Connie Mac Sells swine farm near Matthews is arranged to carry out a 100-brood sow program, and at this time has a herd of 30 sows. The hog raising goes through three projects, the weaning stage, then to a feeding pen for four or five months up to 125 pounds, and finally on another lot near Matthews until market time.

At 6 p.m. the tour ended at the Herman Smith arena, where Dr. Naegle, Dr. Massey and Dr. Davison addressed the group.

Dr. Negle pointed out that the average beef consumption of an individual in 1950 was 145 pounds, and by 1960 was raised to 161 pounds, and by 1970 it would be 170 pounds.

"Today," he said "beef efficiency was now 80 per cent, and hog at 57 per cent. By giving a 2 per cent animal shrinkage, a 5 per cent better conversion, and 3 per cent less time to market, would double the profit for the

A SWINE FEEDING PROGRAM by Bill Depro and Connie Mac Sells on the feeding lot north of Matthews was included on the tour. Sells is shown with a portion of their 300 brood sows.

U.S. Air Base at Da Nang Damaged Heavily by Communist Rockets

SAIGON (AP) — The mighty U.S. air base at Da Nang was reeling today from a Communist rocket attack that left 8 Americans dead, 173 wounded and 42 airplanes crippled or wrecked at a cost of $80 million.

It was the worst punishment inflicted on the U.S. base which has been hit twice in the past five months.

Earlier, 13 Americans had been reported killed, but five Marines at first presumed dead were accounted for.

The sprawling 1,600-acre base on South Vietnam's northern sea coast, launching pad for many of the bombing raids on North Vietnam, was shut down immediately after the attack. Crews went out to repair one badly cratered 10,000-foot runway and sweep debris off of another.

The Communists fired for 45 minutes early today from two positions 4.3 miles southwest of the huge base. Their deadly aim left little doubt the rockets had been well zeroed-in in advance.

Six F4C Phantom jets, each worth nearly $2 million, were destroyed and 10 more were heavily damaged. Two Marine F8 Crusader jets and three Air Force C130 cargo planes were wrecked in the five-minute Communist barrage of 120mm and 140mm rocket fire Friday.

It was the third raid on the base in the last five months and, said one U.S. spokesman, "the worst."

The deadly accurate attack, apparently an effort to cripple the U.S. air assault on North Vietnam, also wrecked four Air Force enlisted men's barracks. Seventy of the 150 wounded were kept in the hospital.

Fifteen planes parked at a corner of the base received minor damage from flying shrapnel, said Air Force Col. Robert Maloy of Coral Gables, Fla., commander of the base's 366th Tactical Fighter Wing.

U.S. officers estimated that 50 rockets were fired, some 120s and some 140s. The 140mm rocket is the largest in the enemy arsenal.

Planes en route to Da Nang were diverted to other bases in South Vietnam and Thailand.

U.S. officials said five of the American servicemen killed were Marines and eight were airmen. Of the 70 hospitalized, about 40 were Marines, the others airmen.

The Viet Cong executed a jailbreak Friday night 20 miles south of Da Nang. The guerrillas began by firing 30 mortar rounds at the provincial jail at Hoi An. Then about 60 of them charged the jail with satchel charges and freed 1,220 prisoners.

A police superintendent was killed and 5 policemen and 29 Vietnamese civilians were wounded. Most of the escapees were being held as suspected Viet Cong. About 190 were recaptured.

A flagless enemy trawler was run aground along the South Vietnamese coast off Cape Batangan, 340 miles northwest of Saigon, by five U.S. naval vessels. Navy officials said the 120-foot, steel-hulled trawler was trying to infiltrate ammunition and supplies to Communist units ashore.

It was the eighth trawler intercepted since U.S. warships began the coastal surveillance campaign known as Operation Market Time in February 1965.

Late reports said the trawler was burning fiercely and emitting numerous secondary explosions, indicating hits on ammunition stores and fuel.

In another development, the United States offered a reward of 50 taels of gold—worth about $5,000 in Vietnam—to any North Vietnamese who helped a downed American flier escape to freedom. The offer was made in a drop over North Vietnam of 16 million leaflets signed by U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker.

Other major developments included:

The 42,000-ton U.S. aircraft carrier Oriskany returned to "Yankee Station" in the Gulf of Tonkin to launch air raids against North Vietnam after an absence of nearly nine months. The Oriskany was heavily damaged last October 26 — the day President Johnson visited South Vietnam — by a fire which took the lives of 43 of her officers and men and wounded 16 more.

U.S. pilots flew 94 bombing missions over North Vietnam Friday. One plane was lost to enemy ground fire, the 607th announced combat loss of the war. In the raids, the American planes concentrated on rail yards and sidings in the Hanoi and Haiphong areas and flew strikes on a rail ferry complex near Thanh Hoa which damaged 15 rail cars.

Marines Eager To Test Good Neighbor Policy

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) - The U.S. Marines came to Miami Beach today, hoping to get better acquainted with representatives from 56 countries.

The Marines are official escorts for the Miss Universe contestants at Sunday night's coronation ball. The winner will be crowned tonight.

Sixty Marines, some fluent in the languages the girls speak, were chosen from over 200 men who volunteered for the chore. All are tall.

"These beauties tend to be long-stemmed," said Maj. Fred St. Clair, the leader of the Leathernecks who drew escort duty. "We have a few short men for the Oriental girls but most of the men are over six feet tall."

All are bachelors between 21 and 25.

Miss Germany and Miss Ireland were most in demand in the preference list the men filled out.

Latest Troop Plea May Send 100,000 More Men to Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. forces in Vietnam probably will be beefed up by 80,000 to 100,000 men, mostly combat troops, to bring the American troop strength there to between 540,000 and 550,000 within a year, say Pentagon military sources.

The prospect in the wake of Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's recent visit to Vietnam and Gen. William C. Westmoreland's conferences here after McNamara's return is for the increase in authorized U.S. strength to total about 60,000 or 70,000 men.

This is the equivalent of two divisions plus their support. It represents the lower range of alternative proposals offered by Westmoreland, the U.S. commander in Vietnam.

Before these units are prepared for movement, some 20,000 to 30,000 other troops will be shipped to Vietnam over the next three months to fill out the long-standing authorization of 480,000 men.

Like the bulk of reinforcements to follow later, these men will be chiefly in combat type units.

The largest of the outfits earmarked to go within about 90 days is the Army's new 198th Infantry Brigade, activated in May at Ft. Hood, Tex. The 198th numbers 5,600 men.

Artillery battalions, helicopter companies and similar outfits also will be included in the 20,000 to 30,000-man increment.

Although the later reinforcements, to be sent during the remainder of the 1968 fiscal year, are spoken of in terms of division forces, it is likely they will move to Vietnam in lesser formations, probably brigades and smaller units.

The Army could draw brigades out of its existing forces in the mainland United States and Hawaii, form entirely new units, or follow a combination of these courses.

Since the major Vietnam buildup began in mid-1965, the Army has created one new division and four independent infantry brigades.

The new 9th Infantry Division and three of the brigades have been in battle in Vietnam for some time.

One controlling factor in the pace of the buildup is availability of equipment.

McNamara's statement that there will be no extension of the one-year tour of duty in Vietnam nor "any significant impact on current draft calls" suggests he has placed a limiting framework around the extent of the immediately foreseeable commitment of U.S. forces to Vietnam.

Westmoreland made clear Thursday he foresees a greater ratio of combat to support troops in the buildup just ahead.

He told a White House news conference that, as a result of a two-year development of a big logistical base, "We are now in a position where, for every man that is deployed, we will get a double return in combat power."

McNamara raised questions earlier this week about whether the ratio of support troops to combat forces is topheavy and he has called for studies to reduce what he called waste and inefficiency in using resources already in Vietnam.

Military men contend an unusually large percentage of construction and other support troops where needed in connection with the massive buildup because there were practically no facilities existing in Vietnam to handle the huge volume of American troops.

Area Scouts To Jamboree

Seven Southeast Missouri Boy Scouts and Explorers will leave Thursday for the XII World Jamboree at Farragut State Park, Idaho.

The jamboree will be held Aug. 1-9 and scouts from nearly 100 nations will participate.

While the seven scouts are attending the jamboree, the Southeast Missouri Council will carry on a local program with the jamboree theme, "For Friendship."

About 10 million scouts around the world will hold special local events this year to celebrate the 60th year of the scouting movement.

J. C. Newcomer, council commissioner, Bloomfield, will serve as a Jamboree scoutmaster in charge of the seven area representatives attending.

The scouts are Brad Whatley, post 54, Kiwanis Club, Gideon; Joseph K. Russell, Troop 10, First Baptist church, Cape Girardeau; James B. Holifield, Troop 72, Kiwanis Club, Bloomfield; James A. Kinder III, Troop 3, Centenary Methodist church, Cape Girardeau; Charles Rapp, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau; James A. Summitt, Troop 182 Cardwell Rotary Club, Cardwell, and Don Rice, Troop 4, First Presbyterian church, Cape Girardeau.

The area scouts will travel as part of a contingent from Region 8, which includes Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

Bridge Spans Win Coast Guard Approval

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Coast Guard Friday approved clearance distance between spans of the proposed bridge over the Mississippi River between Caruthersville, Mo., and Dyersburg, Tenn. The action brings construction of the bridge nearer.

Rep. Robert A. Everett, D-Tenn., said the matter now goes to the two states so they can make permit applications.

The bridge, to be constructed as part of the interestate highway system, will be financed 90 per cent by the federal government and 10 per cent by the two states.

The Coast Guard notified Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., it has approved clearance distances of approximately 900 feet for the downstream channel and 550 feet for the upstream channel, as had been worked out in conferences with officials of the agency and the two states.

Strike Shuts Down Copper Industry

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The nation's copper industry was virtually shutdown today after contract negotiations affecting about 37,000 union members broke down.

The Big Four of the copper industry—Kennecott, Phelps-Dodge, Anaconda, and American Smelting and Refining and numerous smaller western copper producers all were affected. Union officials called it "an orderly shutdown."

More than 80 per cent of the workers are with the United Steelworkers of America, which recently merged with the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Injuries Fatal to Hayti Woman

Mrs. Odessa W. Edwards 29, of Hayti, died at St. Francis Hospital early today of injuries suffered Wednesday night in a traffic accident that killed two other persons.

One of the woman's twin 5-year-old daughters, Jeanette, and the driver of the truck with whom they were riding, Charles Mosley, 61, of Cape Girardeau were killed. The other twin, Rosette, was hurt.

Authorities said Mosley lost control of his truck while passing a larger truck on I55 near Benton and when he slowed the vehicle, it was hit from the rear.

Two persons were injured in an accident on highway 25, three miles north of Malden last night at 9:35 p.m.

Herschel Davenport, 48, Dexter, and Carroll McGowan, 32, Bernie, passengers in a 1966 Chevrolet, driven by Edgar Lee Moore, 26, route three, Dexter, were injured when the Moore car attempted to pass a 1967 Ford, driven by Reginia Wayne New, 46, route two, Malden.

The Moore car struck the rear fender of the New car, and the Chevrolet ran off the shoulder and overturned, the highway patrol said.

Davenport was taken to the Dunklin County Memorial hospital, Kennett, with possible head injuries, and McGowan, with possible back injuries.

Moore was given a summons by the patrol.

Doyle D. Williams, 43, New Carlisle, Ohio, driver of a 1967 Chevrolet, received broken ribs in an accident Friday at 9:20 a.m. on U.S. 60, 10 miles west of Sikeston.

A 1967 Ford pickup, driven by Billy Kelly, 19, Essex, failed to yield right-of-way at a stop sign and ran into the Williams car, troopers said. Kelly was given a summons by the highway patrol for failure to yield the right-of-way.

Williams was taken to the Missouri Delta Community hospital in Sikeston.

One of the worst fires in the nation's history occurred Oct. 9, 1871, when a forest in Peshtigo, Wis., burned resulting in 1,152 deaths.

Rail Official Predicts Strike Will Hit West Coast Lines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The official spokesman for railway management predicted today that a strike against all lines serving the West Coast will start tonight.

J. E. Wolfe said, "I can say with assurance on reliable information that all 22 roads serving the Pacific Coast will be tied up one minute after midnight" by six shopcraft unions.

Leaders of the unions representing some 137,000 workers refused Thursday to extend their voluntary no-strike pledge after a Senate-House conference recessed Monday without reaching a decision on a bill designed to avert a strike. Union executives later reaffirmed their decision to rescind the pledge as of midnight tonight.

Wolfe told a reporter, "Unless something is done promptly the nation's economy will be brought to a halt quickly."

Wolfe said that although the predicted walkout would hit directly only the western lines, railroads and industry in many parts of the country would inevitably be affected.

An official of one of the unions said he had no knowledge of an impending strike against major lines.

Joseph W. Ramsey, vice president of the AFL-CIO International Associated of Machinists, said, "I haven't heard a thing from any of our general managers" and that "everything is silence" at his headquarters here.

Ramsey reaffirmed the opposition of the leadership of the six unions to wildcat strikes but added, "I can't guarantee what will happen."

Government and industry sources had indicated earlier they thought any strike would be against only a few major lines, rather than all 90 per cent of the nation's railroads involved in the wage dispute.

White House press secretary George Christian, quoting President Johnson as saying "a strike at this time would have grave consequences," said Friday "the government is going to do everything it can" to prevent a strike.

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara met earlier Friday with congressional leaders of both parties to advise them of the situation.

The other unions involved represent sheet metal workers, boilermakers, electricians, carmen and firemen and oilers. They are demanding a 6.5 per cent pay hike this year and 5 per cent next year, plus 12.5 cents an hour in each of the two years for skilled workers. They now average $2.94 an hour, with skilled workers earning up to $3.05 an hour.

The railroads have offered a 6 per cent hike for an 18-month agreement, plus a five-cent skill increase.

The president of a major investor-owned utility company stated before the House Committee on Agriculture that approval of a proposed federal electric bank would mean eventual nationalization of America's investor-owned utility industry. On one side would be the numerous rural electric cooperatives fully established, generally unregulated, virtually untaxed, having to pay only 2 per cent to 4 per cent for an unlimited amount of money, able to combine, and able to absorb other utilities' systems. On the other side would be the investor-owned electric utility companies, heavily regulated and taxed and having to pay over 6 per cent for the use of money.

THE BIG GET BIGGER, THE SMALL GET SMALLER

In the printing business as in farming and everything else, the big continue to get bigger, the small get smaller.

As a result of the ruling of the Federal Reserve banks that after September 1 all checks must carry the individual number of the bank on which they are issued, and that in a special metallic ink so that electronic machines can sort them properly, thousands of printing shops throughout the United States will lose hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of business in check and warrant printing. None but the extremely large companies are equipped with the special machinery and inks to do the job. What the Federal Reserve Banks save by using the new method, the printer and consumer will probably lose to the big companies. They'll get richer, virtually have a monopoly on such business, and can charge whatever price they want to charge. Because of such changes, it becomes increasingly more difficult for the smaller business establishment to exist.

The printing business is only a small drop in the bucket compared to changes in other locally established and locally owned and operated businesses of long standing. A few years back, the Mexico Refractories was absorbed into the Kaiser Aluminum. Last week, the Stamper Co., at Moberly became a part of General Mills, while A. P. Green at Mexico was absorbed into U.S. Gypsum. All are giants in their particular field and gain even more giant stature by these consolidations.

This is an age of Giantism.

Not all teen-age drivers "scorch out" from a stoplight to see how much rubber they can lay in a peeling, screeching race to prove who has the "hot go-machine."

Some, as a matter of fact, cruise the highways rather deliberately and slowly in a serach for safety, and in an effort to rescue stranded motorists.

The Gearlords, for example, a teen-age car club in California, could more aptly be named "Knights of the Good Turn," because its young members prowl the roads doing good deeds.

In one such instance, a husband braved the night to get medicine for his sick wife. On the way, his car broke down and he could not repair it.

Members of the Gearlords came to the rescue and, while they couldn't fix the car, they did push it nine blocks to a garage.

Then they helped the man find an all-night drugstore.

The relieved husband, medicine in hand, offered the youths some money, which they refused. Instead, they gave him a card, and said:

"If you want to show your appreciation, tell your local police chief we helped you, and tell your friends not all teen-agers are bad."

The card, bearing a picture of an armored knight, said: "You have been assisted by the Gearlords Car Club, Altadena."

According to California police, there are about 250 such clubs in the southern part of the state, with a total membership of about 4,000 teenage boys. Each one is interested in improving the image of the teen-age driver - and constructively achieving that goal.

Police say these young men "are a wonderful bunch of kids" who promote the idea of safe driving, assist other motorists in trouble, and organize such social activities as dances, beach parties and car rallies.

To which "Driver's Seat can only add: "Let there be more clubs of this kind, stocked with the same kind of young men, bringing chivalry and the standards of King Arthur's court to the hazards of today's roads."

You may need such assistance one day.

Status symbol seekers create phonies - where there were none before

Back in grandma's day bustles were worn to make fannies Whistle - Worthy, whether they were or not. (-and I've never seen one that wasn't.)

But let's jump from here to our time.

The most revolutionary of all was the bra - the falsies. Since then we males have never known what we're up against.

Even now, 'tis said, folks without air conditioners in their cars, drive with windows rolled up summer and winter. That's pretty darn phony, you gotta admit, but how about this younger set of phonies that install trailer hitches on the rear bumper of their cars, even though they don't own a boat.

Dimension of deceit has been with us a long time. Back in medieval times there were Crusaders who carried chastity belt keys on their armors, even though they didn't have a girl friend. (How about that for phonyism?)

POP WAS FUSSY

When the college's football squad was called out for the first practice session of the season one of the aspirants was so fleet of foot that he made the others look like turtles. The coach asked him how he developed such incredible speed.

"I used to catch jackrabbits on my pop's ranch," he explained.

"But," the coach pointed out, "a lot of others boys here claim that they did the same thing. Still they're not nearly as fast as you."

"Wal, my pop is pretty fussy about the rabbits he eats," the boy elaborated. "I had to run along side of-em and feel to see if they were fat enough for pop before I caught them."

THE CONSTRUCTIVE ALTERNATIVE

"Businessmen have no practical choice but to insist that social problems be given the same careful analytical treatment that business uses in solving its own problems," says the head of a large oil company. In pursuing this objective, he believes that businessmen should become increasingly involved in what can be called the "strategy of the constructive alternative." In response to "creative federalism", this strategy can offer "creative competition" between business and government to serve the national interest.

To an ever increasing extent, top business executives across the country are becoming aware that continuing expansion of costly government welfare programs, and a tendency to shift responsibility for the welfare of large groups of citizens to the shoulders of centralized authorities and bureaus will inevitably lead to the loss of freedom and private initiative. In effect, the rise of the welfare state has presented a competitive challenge that must be met with the same kind of resourcefulness and imagination that are required to develop a great industry.

As times goes on, these farsighted leaders propose to show that the social problems of our time can be solved within the framework of self-government and the private enterprise system.

An Editor's Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

THE MISSING THOUSANDS

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND -- The 4-year-old girl, ill with typhus, had spent only one night in the Ukranian hospital when it was hurriedly evacuated ahead of onrushing German troops. All records were lost. Somewhere on the road Hitler's panzers overtook the trucks carrying the patients and for four years thereafter little Emilie starved on precarious charity.

At the end of the war a French officer found the waif and brought her home to be raised as a member of his family. Emilie loved her foster home and thought of herself as French. But as her marriage approached she wondered more and more about her real parents. Finally, she wrote to the Central Tracing Agency of the Red Cross in Geneva.

Emilie didn't have many clues to offer. She knew her first name and those of her brother and sisters. But the agency already had the answer. A man and wife now in West Germany had long had a letter on file telling how they had brought their Emilie to the hospital, how the hospital had vanished and of their long years of agonized searching.

So Emilie had two sets of parents at her wedding.

IN A bleak "temporary" building on the grounds of the International Red Cross headquarters here the musty files contain many heartbreaks and some happy endings. The Central Tracing Agency is nearly 100 years old. You can thumb through the yellowed lists of prisoners in the Franco - Prussian war of 1870. Every American POW of World Wars I and II had at least one card in the file.

During World War II 1,200 workers labored over 50,000 communications a day, most of them inquiries about missing persons. The files are bewildering. There are stacks of Kims and Rhees, dating from the Korean war. There are 50,000 Meyers, 50,000 Mullers or Millers and 160 ways of spelling John, including Jean, Johan, Ivar, Ivan, Han, Hans, Joop, Joannis and Schani.

IN SUCH a huge collection there are, naturally, fantastic coincidences. But none can beat the case of Pvt. Pascale di Cataldo Riggi of the Italian Marine Battalion "San Marco" who was born in Catalnissetta on Sept. 15, 1924, and captured at Metline on May 5, 1943. The only trouble was that two cards came in on Pascale, giving different serial numbers and different prison camps in Britain.

As it turned out there were two Pascale Riggis from the same outfit, born the same day at the same place and captured the same day at the same place. Even their fathers' name were identical.

SINCE THE Russians at the time of World War II had not signed the Geneva Convention and thus gave no information about German prisoners and battle dead, and since the Germans replied in kind, there are even today about 300,000 missing persons from both armies. Time dims hopes and anguish gradually subsides into a dull ache. But there remain wistful dreams that men who vanished a quarter of a century ago will return to their married children and aging wives.

As Allied troops closed in on the German concentration camps, hurried efforts were made to obliterate the terrors. Those wretches who could not conveniently be gassed and burned were driven out onto the roads, and the camp records were, in most cases, utterly destroyed. Even today among the 1,000 requests for information which the Central Tracing Agency receives each week there are pathetic efforts to find those whose ashes have long been nurturing the gardnes of Dachau and Belsen.

THERE ARE, of course, successes, and this makes it all worth while. There was the Vietnamese child, missing for nine years, who was finally reunited with his mother in far-off Noumea. There were Natalie and Olga, sisters, who escaped from a prison train en-route to Siberia and 22 years later found their sister who had become the wife of an Englishman. And questions half a century old were answered when a Polish family asked the Tracing Agency's help in finding what happened to Nicolas who went to America in 1912.

The agency's files contain some curious communications. There is the cigaret package thrown from a Bulgarian train carrying the names of war prisoners. The Japanese fudged on the Geneva Convention during World War II and would not let Red Cross representatives interview prisoners. But they could shake hands with them. After one such handshake at the prison camp of Shamsuipo the Red Cross man found in his palm a tiny slip of tissue on which, in practically microscopic writing, a British doctor had stated the camp deficiencies.

TO HISTORIANS and strategists, wars are tides to be charted neatly in the calm of retrospect. But to little people caught up in its churning there is little order. The prisoner for whom no records are kept. The apparent orphan taken from the bombed village by a kindly rescue mission. The homecoming soldier who returns to four blackened walls.

With what unbounded optimism did foolish man house his records of missing persons in a temporary building.

Behind-the-Scenes Battle on Negro Issue Hits $10 Billion Project

Washington, D.C.: -- It was high noon on Thursday, June 22, when 18 powerful men gathered in a White House office to await the President for a discussion on how to spend $10 billion.

They were not all friends, these men. Some were bankers and heavy construction men. Some were labor leaders -- George Meany and Walter Reuther, hardly a Damon and Pythias. One was Whitney Young, executive director of the Urban League, who only the day before had learned of a gory plot to assassinate him by sniper fire.

The President had summoned them to work under industrialist Edgar Kaiser to rip the slum out of scores of cities -- as swiftly and cheaply as possible.

At 12:24 exactly, Mr. Johnson strode in, shook as many hands as he could and spoke for 20 minutes. In effect he said that the construction unions, represented by the laconic, but affable Joe Keenam, secretary of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), would have to cooperate with the heavy construction contractors and with the Negro leaders.

Union membership rosters would have to be opened to Negro and other minority workers. Automatic modern equipment for composite high speed construction would have to be accepted by the labor leaders. Builders would have to deal with union officials on union scales.

That's what the President meant when he told the 18-man committee to get together "but don't squabble in public, let's not quarrel, let's get this work done."

Then the full committee, some still merely stiffly polite with each other, went to lunch at the Madison Hotel. There they agreed to meet in Chicago on July 20.

There they will be distant from the Presidential heat and may not again melt easily -- though the committee chairman, Edgar Kaiser, will do his best. It may not be enough. The construction union chiefs say you can't build new cities on emotion. Skills are needed. There can't be instant integration, say they.

The most steadfast opposition to opening the big unions to all comers on the civil rights front springs from the building and construction union's elder statesman, Peter Schoemann, head of the plumbers and pipefitters.

"You have read in past reports in our . . . Journal," he told his followers recently, "that I have said 'Racial Equality? Yes!' On another occasion I said 'take them in provided they are qualified!' It does not therefore follow that our local unions are supposed to roll over and play dead and get some kind of inferiority complex every time a federal agency comes around with some wild scheme for going out and recruiting members of the minority groups."

In the same speech he asserted that "likewise we may have to face a sustained campaign to break down the skilled mechanical trades, at least on many urban renewal jobs, and parcel out our work piecemeal to unqualified and hastily trained residents of what we used to call slums, but which it is more fashionable in the present day to call ghettos.

"These are all very real and very serious challenges and we have absolutely no choice except to face them head on with all the intelligence and all the courage we can bring to our job as electrical trade union officials."

In effect, Shoemann's position is that there can be no "integration by statistics." This he told a high level government peacemaking committee three days before the 18-man committee met with the President.

The peace conclave met on June 19 in the Labor Dept. with Under Secretary of Labor Jim Reynolds who, according to one present, "had a big tub of honey" but nothing was settled.

The labor delegates to the integration peace conference were members of the Building and Construction Trades Department, including its chairman Neal Hagerty and such men as the Carpenters' Maurice Hutcheson, Peter Fosco, secretary-treasurer of the Laborers and Gordon Freemen of the IBEW. They dueled mostly with Assistant Secretary of Labor Stanley Ruttenberg, in charge of manpower and, not too long ago, the head of research for the AFL-CIO.

The positions were fixed. No one took anyone's trench. Schoemann spoke for the rest when he said integration can't be measured by the number of Negroes in a given number of unions. Statistics, No. Skills, Yes.

At the end of the session it was agreed that both sides had talked squarely to the other and that at least the construction unions would be informed in advance of any action the government would take on the integration front where federal money and projects were involved.

None of this broke into the open. But it is the spectre which stalks the billion dollar uprooting of the nation's slum clearing.

At least for the moment the President has succeeded in keeping the squabbling behind the scenes -- just to add a little cool to the long hot summer.

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- It hasn't been announced, but President Johnson has made a very courageous move in regard to Red China.

He has come to the conclusion that the United States cannot ignore the largest country in the world population - wise, especially now that China has the hydrogen bomb; and that it must become a member of the community of nations.

The President came to this decision despite the power of the China lobby in this country. Ever since the McCarthy era it has been worth a politician's life to advocate friendly relations with China. Gen. George Marshall, former chief of staff and the man who did most to win World War II, was castigated as a traitor on the senate floor by both McCarthy and Sen. William Jenner, R-Ind., because he advised that we cooperate with the Chinese Communists. He suggested a coalition communist cabinet with Chiang Kai-Shek.

McCarthy was so vitriolic against three career diplomats who had advised the same policy and fired them. Since then few members of the state department have been willing to stick their necks out regarding China except Roger Hilsman, assistant secretary of state under Kennedy, who has now written a revealing book on our Far Eastern relations.

For Johnson to make an affirmative decision regarding Red China, therefore, will win him few votes in the coming election.

MAURER'S MISSION TO PKING

Nevertheless he decided -- first, because China has nuclear weapons; second, because it is the controlling factor regarding North Vietnamese peace -- that the United States should change its policy.

Therefore when Premiere Ion Gheorghe Maurer of Romania came to Washington for a White House talk, Johnson informed him that the United States was ready to change its policy. The President further requested Maurer to go to Peking and inform Mao Tse-Tung that he, Johnson, believed China must become a respected member of the community of nations.

The President knew that Romania, unlike some of the other Communist states, had maintained close ties with China. He had an extraordinarily frank and friendly talk with Maurer, who was the only communist foreign minister to come to Washington for a conference. Romania had been working with Denmark to try to find a formula for peace in the Near East.

When Maurer went to Peking last month, the press reported that he was trying to patch up relations between the Soviet and China. Actually, however, he went to Peking on the mission for President Johnson.

A detailed report on his visit has not yet arrived from Bucharest. The President does not expect any change overnight. But he has made the first gesture and it is one of the most important foreign policy decisions of his career.

THE GUN LOBBY

One clue as to why the National Rifle Association is able to get $2,717,300 annually from the American taxpayers to practice target shooting comes from a look at the house appropriations committee which votes the money.

Chairman of the subcommittee on military construction and second in command of the defense subcommittee is good old Rep. Bob Sikes, D-Fla., who is also a major general in the army reserves and one of the rootin' tootin' advocates of guns in the hands of hunters, rifle association members and others.

On the senate side the man who writes the gun legislation is Roman Hruska, R-Neb., a passionate friend of the National Rifle Association. Hruska is now pushing a new gun bill which is a very weak substitute for that proposed by both the administration and the two Kennedy brothers, who want to guard against future assassinations.

Hruska's gun bill is about what Sen. Tom Dodd proposed prior to Nov. 22, 1963 -- namely, the control of mail order sales of hand guns. After Nov. 22, 1963, Nick Katzenbach, then deputy attorney general, stepped in to propose stringent controls in the trade of all guns. Bobby Kennedy, then attorney general, was too shaken up at the time to do very much.

Sen. Dodd sent along with this new legislation. But almost four years have now lapsed and no bill has passed congress.

Although the Hruska bill in the senate is woefully inadequate, Sen. Teddy Kennedy, D-Mass., will probably urge that it be ok'd by the senate judiciary subcommittee, so it can be amended on the senate floor.

The danger is, however, that the full senate judiciary committee won't let it reach the senate floor. On the judiciary committee are such dyed - in - the - wool champions of free gun transportation as Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.; Jim Eastland, D-Miss.; John McClellan, D-Ark.; Sam Erven, Jr., D-N.C.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., confided to Sarah McClendon that he asked LBJ to come to the rescue of Sen. Tom Dodd during the censure debate. LBJ refused. Earlier the White House made it clear that Johnson when vice president went to Connecticut to speak for Dodd only because Johnson thought it was a campaign fund - raising affair, not a testimonial dinner . . . Alf Landon, the ex-governor of Kansas who ran against Roosevelt in 1936, has proved himself much more of a statesman than the voters of 1936 realized. Now that the internationalization of Jerusalem is under discussion, plus other international cities, it turns up that Alf Landon back on Oct. 25, 1945, proposed: "Nations must seriously consider internationalizing the few hitherto key spots of the world."

POOR CHARLIE SAYS!

LEE JOHNSON, CITIZEN EMPLOYEE, FRIEND

Lee Johnson, a gentleman of color, passed to his reward Monday morning in Chicago while visiting a niece.

Lee Johnson was a man of character, honest, industrious, a member of the Board of Deacons of the West End Baptist Church, energetic and for many years a beloved employee of the DAILY STANDARD.

He served us in the capacity of sterotyper and pressman. When we first purchased our 24 page Goss Rotary press, Lee Johnson helped to erect it and was one of its operators until his retirement.

We are sincerely grieved at his passing. What more can one man say of another than that he was considered a member of the family and loved and trusted as a brother.

The president of a major investor-owned utility company stated before the House Committee on Agriculture that approval of a proposed federal electric bank would mean eventual nationalization of America's investor-owned utility industry. On one side would be the numerous rural electric cooperatives fully established, generally unregulated, virtually untaxed, having to pay only 2 per cent to 4 per cent for an unlimited amount of money, able to combine, and able to absorb other utilities' systems. On the other side would be the investor-owned electric utility companies, heavily regulated and taxed and having to pay over 6 per cent for the use of money.

THE BIG GET BIGGER, THE SMALL GET SMALLER

In the printing business as in farming and everything else, the big continue to get bigger, the small get smaller.

As a result of the ruling of the Federal Reserve banks that after September 1 all checks must carry the individual number of the bank on which they are issued, and that in a special metallic ink so that electronic machines can sort them properly, thousands of printing shops throughout the United States will lose hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of business in check and warrant printing. None but the extremely large companies are equipped with the special machinery and inks to do the job. What the Federal Reserve Banks save by using the new method, the printer and consumer will probably lose to the big companies. They'll get richer, virtually have a monopoly on such business, and can charge whatever price they want to charge. Because of such changes, it becomes increasingly more difficult for the smaller business establishment to exist.

The printing business is only a small drop in the bucket compared to changes in other locally established and locally owned and operated businesses of long standing. A few years back, the Mexico Refractories was absorbed into the Kaiser Aluminum. Last week, the Stamper Co., at Moberly became a part of General Mills, while A. P. Green at Mexico was absorbed into U.S. Gypsum. All are giants in their particular field and gain even more giant stature by these consolidations.

This is an age of Giantism.

Not all teen-age drivers "scorch out" from a stoplight to see how much rubber they can lay in a peeling, screeching race to prove who has the "hot go-machine."

Some, as a matter of fact, cruise the highways rather deliberately and slowly in a serach for safety, and in an effort to rescue stranded motorists.

The Gearlords, for example, a teen-age car club in California, could more aptly be named "Knights of the Good Turn," because its young members prowl the roads doing good deeds.

In one such instance, a husband braved the night to get medicine for his sick wife. On the way, his car broke down and he could not repair it.

Members of the Gearlords came to the rescue and, while they couldn't fix the car, they did push it nine blocks to a garage.

Then they helped the man find an all-night drugstore.

The relieved husband, medicine in hand, offered the youths some money, which they refused. Instead, they gave him a card, and said:

"If you want to show your appreciation, tell your local police chief we helped you, and tell your friends not all teen-agers are bad."

The card, bearing a picture of an armored knight, said: "You have been assisted by the Gearlords Car Club, Altadena."

According to California police, there are about 250 such clubs in the southern part of the state, with a total membership of about 4,000 teenage boys. Each one is interested in improving the image of the teen-age driver - and constructively achieving that goal.

Police say these young men "are a wonderful bunch of kids" who promote the idea of safe driving, assist other motorists in trouble, and organize such social activities as dances, beach parties and car rallies.

To which "Driver's Seat can only add: "Let there be more clubs of this kind, stocked with the same kind of young men, bringing chivalry and the standards of King Arthur's court to the hazards of today's roads."

You may need such assistance one day.

Status symbol seekers create phonies - where there were none before

Also there were "rats" to puff Grandma's hair up and out. The reason? I don't know.

But let's jump from here to our time.

The most revolutionary of all was the bra - the falsies. Since then we males have never known what we're up against.

Dimension of deceit has been with us a long time. Back in medieval times there were Crusaders who carried chastity belt keys on their armors, even though they didn't have a girl friend. (How about that for phonyism?)

The most steadfast opposition to opening the big unions to all comers on the civil rights front springs from the building and construction union's elder statesman, Peter Schoemann, head of the plumbers and pipefitters.

"You have read in past reports in our . . . Journal," he told his followers recently, "that I have said 'Racial Equality? Yes!' On another occasion I said 'take them in provided they are qualified!' It does not therefore follow that our local unions are supposed to roll over and play dead and get some kind of inferiority complex every time a federal agency comes around with some wild scheme for going out and recruiting members of the minority groups."

In the same speech he asserted that "likewise we may have to face a sustained campaign to break down the skilled mechanical trades, at least on many urban renewal jobs, and parcel out our work piecemeal to unqualified and hastily trained residents of what we used to call slums, but which it is more fashionable in the present day to call ghettos.

"These are all very real and very serious challenges and we have absolutely no choice except to face them head on with all the intelligence and all the courage we can bring to our job as electrical trade union officials."

In effect, Shoemann's position is that there can be no "integration by statistics." This he told a high level government peacemaking committee three days before the 18-man committee met with the President.

The peace conclave met on June 19 in the Labor Dept. with Under Secretary of Labor Jim Reynolds who, according to one present, "had a big tub of honey" but nothing was settled.

The labor delegates to the integration peace conference were members of the Building and Construction Trades Department, including its chairman Neal Hagerty and such men as the Carpenters' Maurice Hutcheson, Peter Fosco, secretary-treasurer of the Laborers and Gordon Freemen of the IBEW. They dueled mostly with Assistant Secretary of Labor Stanley Ruttenberg, in charge of manpower and, not too long ago, the head of research for the AFL-CIO.

The positions were fixed. No one took anyone's trench. Schoemann spoke for the rest when he said integration can't be measured by the number of Negroes in a given number of unions. Statistics, No. Skills, Yes.

At the end of the session it was agreed that both sides had talked squarely to the other and that at least the construction unions would be informed in advance of any action the government would take on the integration front where federal money and projects were involved.

None of this broke into the open. But it is the spectre which stalks the billion dollar uprooting of the nation's slum clearing.

At least for the moment the President has succeeded in keeping the squabbling behind the scenes -- just to add a little cool to the long hot summer.

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- It hasn't been announced, but President Johnson has made a very courageous move in regard to Red China.

He has come to the conclusion that the United States cannot ignore the largest country in the world population - wise, especially now that China has the hydrogen bomb; and that it must become a member of the community of nations.

The President came to this decision despite the power of the China lobby in this country. Ever since the McCarthy era it has been worth a politician's life to advocate friendly relations with China. Gen. George Marshall, former chief of staff and the man who did most to win World War II, was castigated as a traitor on the senate floor by both McCarthy and Sen. William Jenner, R-Ind., because he advised that we cooperate with the Chinese Communists. He suggested a coalition communist cabinet with Chiang Kai-Shek.

McCarthy was so vitriolic against three career diplomats who had advised the same policy and fired them. Since then few members of the state department have been willing to stick their necks out regarding China except Roger Hilsman, assistant secretary of state under Kennedy, who has now written a revealing book on our Far Eastern relations.

For Johnson to make an affirmative decision regarding Red China, therefore, will win him few votes in the coming election.

MAURER'S MISSION TO PKING

Nevertheless he decided -- first, because China has nuclear weapons; second, because it is the controlling factor regarding North Vietnamese peace -- that the United States should change its policy.

Therefore when Premiere Ion Gheorghe Maurer of Romania came to Washington for a White House talk, Johnson informed him that the United States was ready to change its policy. The President further requested Maurer to go to Peking and inform Mao Tse-Tung that he, Johnson, believed China must become a respected member of the community of nations.

The President knew that Romania, unlike some of the other Communist states, had maintained close ties with China. He had an extraordinarily frank and friendly talk with Maurer, who was the only communist foreign minister to come to Washington for a conference. Romania had been working with Denmark to try to find a formula for peace in the Near East.

When Maurer went to Peking last month, the press reported that he was trying to patch up relations between the Soviet and China. Actually, however, he went to Peking on the mission for President Johnson.

A detailed report on his visit has not yet arrived from Bucharest. The President does not expect any change overnight. But he has made the first gesture and it is one of the most important foreign policy decisions of his career.

THE GUN LOBBY

One clue as to why the National Rifle Association is able to get $2,717,300 annually from the American taxpayers to practice target shooting comes from a look at the house appropriations committee which votes the money.

Chairman of the subcommittee on military construction and second in command of the defense subcommittee is good old Rep. Bob Sikes, D-Fla., who is also a major general in the army reserves and one of the rootin' tootin' advocates of guns in the hands of hunters, rifle association members and others.

On the senate side the man who writes the gun legislation is Roman Hruska, R-Neb., a passionate friend of the National Rifle Association. Hruska is now pushing a new gun bill which is a very weak substitute for that proposed by both the administration and the two Kennedy brothers, who want to guard against future assassinations.

Hruska's gun bill is about what Sen. Tom Dodd proposed prior to Nov. 22, 1963 -- namely, the control of mail order sales of hand guns. After Nov. 22, 1963, Nick Katzenbach, then deputy attorney general, stepped in to propose stringent controls in the trade of all guns. Bobby Kennedy, then attorney general, was too shaken up at the time to do very much.

Sen. Dodd sent along with this new legislation. But almost four years have now lapsed and no bill has passed congress.

Although the Hruska bill in the senate is woefully inadequate, Sen. Teddy Kennedy, D-Mass., will probably urge that it be ok'd by the senate judiciary subcommittee, so it can be amended on the senate floor.

The danger is, however, that the full senate judiciary committee won't let it reach the senate floor. On the judiciary committee are such dyed - in - the - wool champions of free gun transportation as Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.; Jim Eastland, D-Miss.; John McClellan, D-Ark.; Sam Erven, Jr., D-N.C.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., confided to Sarah McClendon that he asked LBJ to come to the rescue of Sen. Tom Dodd during the censure debate. LBJ refused. Earlier the White House made it clear that Johnson when vice president went to Connecticut to speak for Dodd only because Johnson thought it was a campaign fund - raising affair, not a testimonial dinner . . . Alf Landon, the ex-governor of Kansas who ran against Roosevelt in 1936, has proved himself much more of a statesman than the voters of 1936 realized. Now that the internationalization of Jerusalem is under discussion, plus other international cities, it turns up that Alf Landon back on Oct. 25, 1945, proposed; "Nations must seriously consider internationalizing the few hitherto key spots of the world."

An Editor's Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

THE MISSING THOUSANDS

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND -- The 4-year-old girl, ill with typhus, had spent only one night in the Ukranian hospital when it was hurriedly evacuated ahead of onrushing German troops. All the records were lost. Somewhere on the road Hitler's panzers overtook the trucks carrying the patients and for four years thereafter little Emilie starved on precarious charity.

At the end of the war a French officer found the waif and brought her home to be raised as a member of his family. Emilie loved her foster home and thought of herself as French. But as her marriage approached she wondered more and more about her real parents. Finally, she wrote to the Central Tracing Agency of the Red Cross in Geneva.

Emilie didn't have many clues to offer. She knew her first name and those of her brother and sisters. But the agency already had the answer. A man and wife now in West Germany had long had a letter on file telling how they had brought their Emilie to the hospital, how the hospital had vanished and of their long years of agonized searching.

So Emilie had two sets of parents at her wedding.

IN A bleak "temporary" building on the grounds of the International Red Cross headquarters here the musty files contain many heartbreaks and some happy endings. The Central Tracing Agency is nearly 100 years old. You can thumb through the yellowed lists of prisoners in the Franco - Prussian war of 1870. Every American POW of World Wars I and II had at least one card in the file.

During World War II 1,200 workers labored over 50,000 communications a day, most of them inquiries about missing persons. The files are bewildering. There are stacks of Kims and Rhees, dating from the Korean war. There are 50,000 Meyers, 50,000 Mullers or Millers and 160 ways of spelling John, including Jean, Johan, Ivar, Ivan, Han, Hans, Joop, Joannis and Schani.

IN SUCH a huge collection there are, naturally, fantastic coincidences. But none can beat the case of Pvt. Pascale di Cataldo Riggi of the Italian Marine Battalion "San Marco" who was born in Catalnissetta on Sept. 15, 1924, and captured at Metline on May 5, 1943. The only trouble was that two cards came in on Pascale, giving different serial numbers and different prison camps in Britain.

As it turned out there were two Pascale Riggis from the same outfit, born the same day at the same place and captured the same day at the same place. Even their fathers' name were identical.

SINCE THE Russians at the time of World War II had not signed the Geneva Convention and thus gave no information about German prisoners and battle dead, and since the Germans replied in kind, there are even today about 300,000 missing persons from both armies. Time dims hopes and anguish gradually subsides into a dull ache. But there remain wistful dreams that men who vanished a quarter of a century ago will return to their married children and aging wives.

As Allied troops closed in on the German concentration camps, hurried efforts were made to obliterate the terrors. Those wretches who could not conveniently be gassed and burned were driven out onto the roads, and the camp records were, in most cases, utterly destroyed. Even today among the 1,000 requests for information which the Central Tracing Agency receives each week there are pathetic efforts to find those whose ashes have long been nurturing the gardnes of Dachau and Belsen.

THERE ARE, of course, successes, and this makes it all worth while. There was the Vietnamese child, missing for nine years, who was finally reunited with his mother in far-off Noumea. There were Natalie and Olga, sisters, who escaped from a prison train en route to Siberia and 22 years later found their sister who had become the wife of an Englishman. And questions half a century old were answered when a Polish family asked the Tracing Agency's help in finding what happened to Nicolas who went to America in 1912.

The agency's files contain some curious communications. There is the cigaret package thrown from a Bulgarian train carrying the names of war prisoners. The Japanese fudged on the Geneva Convention during World War II and would not let Red Cross representatives interview prisoners. But they could shake hands with them. After one such handshake at the prison camp of Shamsuipo the Red Cross man found in his palm a tiny slip of tissue on which, in practically microscopic writing, a British doctor had stated the camp deficiencies.

TO HISTORIANS and strategists, wars are tides to be charted neatly in the calm of retrospect. But to little people caught up in its churning there is little order. The prisoner for whom no records are kept. The apparent orphan taken from the bombed village by a kindly rescue mission. The homecoming soldier who returns to four blackened walls.

With what unbounded optimism did foolish man house his records of missing persons in a temporary building.

FOR THE THIRD time in as many years, the Missouri Conservation Commission has spoken against the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type anti-firearms legislation.

The Commission action at its July meeting followed the reading of a resolution adopted by the Conservation Federation of Missouri. In the resolution, the Federation expressed its opposition to unreasonable firearms legislation and its support of the position taken on the issue by the National Rifle Association.

The Conservation Commission adopted a brief statement to the effect that the department has in the past opposed various forms of the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type proposals to restrict ownership and use of sporting firearms.

The Commission also expressed its support for the Hruska Bill, Senate Bill 1854, which would amend the National Firearms Act of 1934. The amendment would add "destructive devices" to those articles defined as firearms for the purposes of the act, which now pertains only to machine guns and sawed-off rifles and shotguns. The amendment would also revise the procedures for legally obtaining firearms as they are defined in the act.

The Administration-backed Dodd Bill, Senate Bill 1, not only would make the purchase and use of sporting arms much more difficult but would establish registration and licensing procedures that sportsmen fear would lead to even more strict control, or prohibition, in the future, and which would eventually result in curtailment of federal aid to wildlife funds.

Senate Bill 1 was scheduled for hearing in July 1 before the Senate Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency. Senator Thomas Dodd, sponsor of the Dodd Bill, is chairman of the subcommittee.

THE FINAL round of the Babe Ruth tournament was not covered in the Standard because no score book was available.

This information is for those who have not called and inquired about the reason.

We can't spend all morning hunting down scorebooks when it was agreed that we would pick them up at the police station.

TWO CONTROVERSIAL SUBJECTS took up most of the conversation at the All-Star game break:

(1) Which teams are going to win the pennants?

(2) Where are the Kansas City A's headed?

Most observers who gathered in conversation were ready to believe that the Cardinals in the National League and the White Sox in the American, the current leaders, are for real.

But no one was conceding either one of them the pennant. In this connection, Cardinal catcher Tim McCarver said he hoped no one took the Red Birds for granted because they weren't doing it themselves.

"I'm happy we're where we are, out in front, at this point," said McCarver, "but there are too many tough teams in our league. The second half is always tougher. We know that we're going to have to keep on going, winning every game we can . . . maybe winning a few more."

Asked to compare the 1967 Cardinals with the 1964 World Champions, McCarver hesitated.

"Overall," he said, finally, "I think we are a little stronger. Even thinking of the great job Kenny (Boyer) and Bill (White) did for us that year, I think we have a bit more power this season. Not much but a little. Orlando Cepeda has been unbelievable. Aside from the pitching, I think he's the key to our success. He's doing it all with his bat."

This was a modest white lie by McCarver, the third best hitter in the National League at the All-Star break, but he was obviously speaking behond himself.

The National League race drew more conversational attention than did the American where the consensus seems to be that the White Sox will go as far as their pitching carries them.

One difference is that there are definite threats to the White Sox supremacy in the American. The Twins are coming on and so are the Tigers, after a slump earlier.

Now that the Chicago Cubs bubble has burst . . . at least temporarily . . . National Leaguers are having trouble settling on a contender, a real challenger to the Cardinals.

"I keep telling myself," one National League said, "that the Cardinals can't stay up there -- but they keep winning consistently. What happens immediately after the All-Star game may be significant. There have been some fatal slumps in late July."

Cincinnati and San Francisco command most of the attention. The resurgence of Ray Sadecki and Mike McCormick, especially the latter, has boomed the Giant stock . . .

The agreement, though, is that it is going to be another solid race to the finish.

WHISPERED RUMORS around All-Star headquarters produced some new developments in the checkered life of the Kansas City Athletics.

Kansas City voters three weeks ago approved a bond issue for the construction of twin stadiums, one for football and one for baseball. This approval was given even though A's owner, Charles Finley, gave no support to the proposal. The future of football in Kansas City is assured. It is not so in baseball.

In fact, spokesmen close to the Kansas City situation concede that they beliee Finley will try again this fall to vacate that area and head for greener pastures. Oakland is the most frequently mentioned moving point, with Milwaukee a more remote possibility.

The lates word, though, is that both of these locations are not included in American League thinking.

"There is not guarantee as yet," a man close to the American League situaton said, "that Finley will be given permission to move. Right now, I'd say that this is touch and go. Finley has no positive assurance that he can move.

"But he will be advised, if he has not been advised already, to steer clear of Oakland and Milwaukee."

"The Braves' owners botched the transfer to Atlanta by some silly maneuvers," the spokesman said, "but there is no arguing that it was necessary to get out of Milwaukee. The Cubs and White Sox are too close and the Twins have grabbed off the fans to the north. The same situation still holds true."

If Finley receives permission to move, where will he go? "I'd guess New Orleans as the most likely spot," the spokesman said. "The reaction to football there has been great and it's virgin territory for major league ball."

How about a new team for Kansas City? Most people think the city will acquire one if and when Finley leaves. No one will say which team it will be . . .

ST. LOUIS AP - Orlando Cepeda drives in runs even when he's resting, so he figures maybe he ought to rest more.

The big first baseman wheeled his National League-leading batting average up to the plate in the seventh inning Friday night and pinch-singled in a run as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-1. The Red Birds 51st season victory.

"I came to Red Schoendienst, Cardinal manager after Thursday night's game and asked him for some rest," Cepeda said. "I haven't had any days off and I was pretty tired after the game."

"If we can win games like that," Cepeda laughed, "maybe I ought to ask Red for more rests."

Cepeda's single tied the game and the Cardinals scored the winning run when Dave Ricketts fouled out to Jose Pagan in left field. Julian Javier broke for the plate and when Pagan's throw to catcher Jerry May was high, Javier was Safe.

"I'm really not a very good pinch hitter," Cepeda said. "I think this is only the third pinch hit I've gotten in the majors."

Larry Jaster was happy to see the hit because it meant his sixth win against four losses. But Lou Brock was even happier.

Pittsburgh scored a run in the top of the seventh when Gene Alley singled and came around while Lou Brock played hide and seek with Jose Pagan's single. At the time it looked like the only run loser Tommie Sisk, 7-7, would need.

"Boy," Brock said, "I don't know how many times I grabbed for that ball. I picked up everything but the ball." Then he laughed and added, "I must have dug a hole out there."

If Ed Mathews could call his shots, the Atlanta Braves would be a lot more embarrassed than Juan Marichal today.

"I wish it would have come against the Braves," Mathews said Friday night after smashing the 500th home run of his major league career - a three-run shot off Marichal that carried Houston to an 8-6 victory over San Francisco.

It was the seventh homer of the season for Mathews, who hit 493 in 15 years with the Braves in Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta before being dispatched to the Astros in a winter trade.

The 35-year-old third baseman thus became the seventh member of the elite 500 club, joining the Giants' Willie Mays and the New York Yankees' Mickey Mantle as the only active players who have reached the magic figure.

Babe Ruth heads the all-time list with 714 lifetime homers. Mays has 555, Jimmy Foxx, 534, Ted Williams, 521, Mantle, 512, and Mel Ott, 511.

"Don't ask me how many I hope to hit . . . it was tough enough to get this one," Mathews said after powering the Astrokaufw the fifth victory in their last six games.

Elsewhere in the National League, Cincinnati nipped the New York Mets 1-0 in 10 innings, Atlanta topped Philadelphia 4-2 and Los Angeles downed the Chicago Cubs 5-2.

Mathews connected on Marichal's first pitch following singles by Jim Wynn and Rusty Staub in the sixth inning, giving the Astros a 6-4 lead they never relinquished. Rookie Norm Miller had tagged Marichal for a three-run homer in the fourth, helping foil the Giant ace's bid to become the majors' first 13-game winner.

Although confident he can surpass Ott's homer total this year, Mathews expects to see his own mark eclipsed in the future. "No matter how many homers you hit," he said, "some one else will come along to pass you."

Rookie Gary Nolan of Cincinnati hooked up in a scoreless duel with the Mets' Jack Fisher until the 10th inning, when Tony Perez' bases-loaded single won it for the Reds. Nolan allowed only five hits in gaining his eighth victory in 10 decisions.

Perez, whose 15th inning homer Tuesday night gave the NL All Stars a 2-1 victory over the American League, delivered the winning hit after a two-out walk to Floyd Robinson, a single by Vada Pinson and an intentional pass to Pete Rose filled the bases.

Rico Carty pounded a three-run homer in the first inning and Hank Aaron provided an insurance run with his 23rd homer as the Braves held off the Phillies. Winner Tony Cloninger gave up a first-inning homer to Tony Gonzalez and needed relief help in the seventh.

The Dodgers snapped a four-game losing string behind rookie Bill Singer, who blanked Chicago on four hits until the eighth, when he came up with a tender elbow and gave way to Ron Perranoski. Lou Johnson cracked a two-run double and Al Ferrara homered to pace the LA attack.

Big Red Drills

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Solid hitting by both offensive and defensive linemen was the feature of a one-on-one drill in the St. Louis Football Cardinals' first full workout at Lake Forest, Friday.

Big Red rookies and youngsters went through a half-hour session of contact work with some solid blows being delivered.

"It's hard to really point up anyone," said head coach Charley Winner. "A youngster would get in a good pop one time, then might be beaten on the next. But it was a good session and showed that everyone is ready for contact work."

Chuck Latourette, a rookie punter and defensive back from Rice University, was clocked at 4.65 seconds for the 40 yard dash to lead the squad.

Wills, now a Pittsburgh Pirate, said Roseboro had a favorite hotel in St. Louis.

"Roseboro liked it because he could get a creamed chicken omelette anytime he wanted," said Wills.

"But that was only a starter. He'd begin: 'This is Mr. Roseboro in Room 412. I want a creamed chicken omelette, a 16-ounce steak, three bottles of soda and some ice tea.'

"He'd always ask for some rich dessert and just before he'd hang up, he'd ask me if I wanted anything.

"After hearing him order," said Wills, "I just wasn't hungry."

GOLF AS SCHOOL SPORT

EAST LONDON, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's Gary Player, winner of most of the world's top golf trophies, advocated here that golf should be introduced as a high school sport.

Player said: "There are many boys who are not strong enough to play first team cricket, rugby (football) or get on a school's athletic squad and who consequently tend to get complexes. The other boys tease them and call them 'sissies'. This is wrong.

"These boys could play golf where strength, while it is an asset, is not essential. And we could have inter-college matches."

Official games in South African boys' schools are generally limited to cricket, rugby and tennis. A few schools play soccer.

FOR THE THIRD time in as many years, the Missouri Conservation Commission has spoken against the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type anti-firearms legislation.

The Commission action at its July meeting followed the reading of a resolution adopted by the Conservation Federation of Missouri. In the resolution, the Federation expressed its opposition to unreasonable firearms legislation and its support of the position taken on the issue by the National Rifle Association.

The Conservation Commission adopted a brief statement to the effect that the department has in the past opposed various forms of the Dodd Bill and other Dodd-type proposals to restrict ownership and use of sporting firearms.

The Commission also expressed its support for the Hruska Bill, Senate Bill 1854, which would amend the National Firearms Act of 1934. The amendment would add "destructive devices" to those articles defined as firearms for the purposes of the act, which now pertains only to machine guns and sawed-off rifles and shotguns. The amendment would also revise the procedures for legally obtaining firearms as they are defined in the act.

The Administration-backed Dodd Bill, Senate Bill 1, not only would make the purchase and use of sporting arms much more difficult but would establish registration and licensing procedures that sportsmen fear would lead to even more strict control, or prohibition, in the future, and which would eventually result in curtailment of federal aid to wildlife funds.

Senate Bill 1 was scheduled for hearing in July 1 before the Senate Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency. Senator Thomas Dodd, sponsor of the Dodd Bill, is chairman of the subcommittee.

THE FINAL round of the Babe Ruth tournament was not covered in the Standard because no score book was available.

This information is for those who have not called and inquired about the reason.

We can't spend all morning hunting down scorebooks when it was agreed that we would pick them up at the police station.

TWO CONTROVERSIAL SUBJECTS took up most of the conversation at the All-Star game break:

(1) Which teams are going to win the pennants?

(2) Where are the Kansas City A's headed?

Most observers who gathered in conversation were ready to believe that the Cardinals in the National League and the White Sox in the American, the current leaders, are for real.

But no one was conceding either one of them the pennant. In this connection, Cardinal catcher Tim McCarver said he hoped no one took the Red Birds for granted because they weren't doing it themselves.

"I'm happy we're where we are, out in front, at this point," said McCarver, "but there are too many tough teams in our league. The second half is always tougher. We know that we're going to have to keep on going, winning every game we can . . . maybe winning a few more."

Asked to compare the 1967 Cardinals with the 1964 World Champions, McCarver hesitated.

"Overall," he said, finally, "I think we are a little stronger. Even thinking of the great job Kenny (Boyer) and Bill (White) did for us that year, I think we have a bit more power this season. Not much but a little. Orlando Cepeda has been unbelievable. Aside from the pitching, I think he's the key to our success. He's doing it all with his bat."

This was a modest white lie by McCarver, the third best hitter in the National League at the All-Star break, but he was obviously speaking behind himself.

The National League race drew more conversational attention than did the American where the consensus seems to be that the White Sox will go as far as their pitching carries them.

One difference is that there are definite threats to the White Sox supremacy in the American. The Twins are coming on and so are the Tigers, after a slump earlier.

Now that the Chicago Cubs bubble has burst . . . at least temporarily . . . National Leaguers are having trouble settling on a contender, a real challenger to the Cardinals.

"I keep telling myself," one National League said, "that the Cardinals can't stay up there -- but they keep winning consistently. What happens immediately after the All-Star game may be significant. There have been some fatal slumps in late July."

Cincinnati and San Francisco command most of the attention. The resurgence of Ray Sadecki and Mike McCormick, especially the latter, has boomed the Giant stock . . .

The agreement, though, is that it is going to be another solid race to the finish.

WHISPERED RUMORS around All-Star headquarters produced some new developments in the checkered life of the Kansas City Athletics.

Kansas City voters three weeks ago approved a bond issue for the construction of twin stadiums, one for football and one for baseball. This approval was given even though A's owner, Charles Finley, gave no support to the proposal. The future of football in Kansas City is assured. It is not so in baseball.

In fact, spokesmen close to the Kansas City situation concede that they belie Finley will try again this fall to vacate that area and head for greener pastures. Oakland is the most frequently mentioned moving point, with Milwaukee a more remote possibility.

The lates word, though, is that both of these locations are not included in American League thinking.

"There is not guarantee as yet," a man close to the American League situaton said, "that Finley will be given permission to move. Right now, I'd say that this is touch and go. Finley has no positive assurance that he can move.

"But he will be advised, if he has not been advised already, to steer clear of Oakland and Milwaukee."

"The Braves' owners botched the transfer to Atlanta by some silly maneuvers," the spokesman said, "but there is no arguing that it was necessary to get out of Milwaukee. The Cubs and White Sox are too close and the Twins have grabbed off the fans to the north. The same situation still holds true."

If Finley receives permission to move, where will he go? "I'd guess New Orleans as the most likely spot," the spokesman said. "The reaction to football there has been great and it's virgin territory for major league ball."

How about a new team for Kansas City? Most people think the city will acquire one if and when Finley leaves. No one will say which team it will be . . .

ST. LOUIS AP - Orlando Cepeda drives in runs even when he's resting, so he figures maybe he ought to rest more.

The big first baseman wheeled his National League-leading batting average up to the plate in the seventh inning Friday night and pinch-singled in a run as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-1. The Red Birds 51st season victory.

"I came to Red Schoendienst, Cardinal manager after Thursday night's game and asked him for some rest," Cepeda said. "I haven't had any days off and I was pretty tired after the game."

"If we can win games like that," Cepeda laughed, "maybe I ought to ask Red for more rests."

Cepeda's single tied the game and the Cardinals scored the winning run when Dave Ricketts fouled out to Jose Pagan in left field. Julian Javier broke for the plate and when Pagan's throw to catcher Jerry May was high, Javier was Safe.

"I'm really not a very good pinch hitter," Cepeda said. "I think this is only the third pinch hit I've gotten in the majors."

Larry Jaster was happy to see the hit because it meant his sixth win against four losses. But Lou Brock was even happier.

Pittsburgh scored a run in the top of the seventh when Gene Alley singled and came around while Lou Brock played hide and seek with Jose Pagan's single. At the time it looked like the only run loser Tommie Sisk, 7-7, would need.

"Boy," Brock said, "I don't know how many times I grabbed for that ball. I picked up everything but the ball." Then he laughed and added, "I must have dug a hole out there."

If Ed Mathews could call his shots, the Atlanta Braves would be a lot more embarrassed than Juan Marichal today.

"I wish it would have come against the Braves," Mathews said Friday night after smashing the 500th home run of his major league career - a three-run shot off Marichal that carried Houston to an 8-6 victory over San Francisco.

It was the seventh homer of the season for Mathews, who hit 493 in 15 years with the Braves in Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta before being dispatched to the Astros in a winter trade.

The 35-year-old third baseman thus became the seventh member of the elite 500 club, joining the Giants' Willie Mays and the New York Yankees' Mickey Mantle as the only active players who have reached the magic figure.

Babe Ruth heads the all-time list with 714 lifetime homers. Mays has 555, Jimmy Foxx, 534, Ted Williams, 521, Mantle, 512, and Mel Ott, 511.

"Don't ask me how many I hope to hit . . . it was tough enough to get this one," Mathews said after powering the Astrokaufw the fifth victory in their last six games.

Elsewhere in the National League, Cincinnati nipped the New York Mets 1-0 in 10 innings, Atlanta topped Philadelphia 4-2 and Los Angeles downed the Chicago Cubs 5-2.

Mathews connected on Marichal's first pitch following singles by Jim Wynn and Rusty Staub in the sixth inning, giving the Astros a 6-4 lead they never relinquished. Rookie Norm Miller had tagged Marichal for a three-run homer in the fourth, helping foil the Giant ace's bid to become the majors' first 13-game winner.

Although confident he can surpass Ott's homer total this year, Mathews expects to see his own mark eclipsed in the future. "No matter how many homers you hit," he said, "some one else will come along to pass you."

Rookie Gary Nolan of Cincinnati hooked up in a scoreless duel with the Mets' Jack Fisher until the 10th inning, when Tony Perez' bases-loaded single won it for the Reds. Nolan allowed only five hits in gaining his eighth victory in 10 decisions.

Perez, whose 15th inning homer Tuesday night gave the NL All Stars a 2-1 victory over the American League, delivered the winning hit after a two-out walk to Floyd Robinson, a single by Vada Pinson and an intentional pass to Pete Rose filled the bases.

Rico Carty pounded a three-run homer in the first inning and Hank Aaron provided an insurance run with his 23rd homer as the Braves held off the Phillies. Winner Tony Cloninger gave up a first-inning homer to Tony Gonzalez and needed relief help in the seventh.

The Dodgers snapped a four-game losing string behind rookie Bill Singer, who blanked Chicago on four hits until the eighth, when he came up with a tender elbow and gave way to Ron Perranoski. Lou Johnson cracked a two-run double and Al Ferrara homered to pace the LA attack.

Big Red Drills

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Solid hitting by both offensive and defensive linemen was the feature of a one-on-one drill in the St. Louis Football Cardinals' first full workout at Lake Forest, Friday.

Big Red rookies and youngsters went through a half-hour session of contact work with some solid blows being delivered.

"It's hard to really point up anyone," said head coach Charley Winner. "A youngster would get in a good pop one time, then might be beaten on the next. But it was a good session and showed that everyone is ready for contact work."

Chuck Latourette, a rookie punter and defensive back from Rice University, was clocked at 4.65 seconds for the 40 yard dash to lead the squad.

Morley Suffers Third

MORLEY -- Ellsinore notched its sixth Tri - County baseball league game of the season last night by blasting Morley, 12-1.

Norman Morgan absorbed the loss, giving up 10 hits and striking out six.

Jerry Stahl was the winner, going nine innings and giving up seven hits and fanning seven Morley batsmen.

Errors dominated Morley's part of the game as every move seemed to turn into an error.

Five games remain on Morley's schedule before the playoff tournament. Thursday night Morley will be at Malden, which is holding first place in the league standings with a 7-3 record. Ellsinore is 6-3 and Morley 7-4.

Jim May led Morley's seven-hit attack with three safeties, while teammate Morgan added two.

John Gibbs and Larry Eudaley banged out three each for Ellsinore.

ONE ATE, ONE LISTENED

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Maury Wills says he had quite an experience rooming with Dodger catcher John Roseboro.

Wills, now a Pittsburgh Pirate, said Roseboro had a favorite hotel in St. Louis.

"Roseboro liked it because he could get a creamed chicken omelette anytime he wanted," said Wills.

"But that was only a starter. He'd begin: 'This is Mr. Roseboro in Room 412. I want a creamed chicken omelette, a 16-ounce steak, three bottles of soda and some ice tea.'

"He'd always ask for some rich dessert and just before he'd hang up, he'd ask me if I wanted anything.

"After hearing him order," said Wills, "I just wasn't hungry."

GOLF AS SCHOOL SPORT

EAST LONDON, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's Gary Player, winner of most of the world's top golf trophies, advocated here that golf should be introduced as a high school sport.

Player said: "There are many boys who are not strong enough to play first team cricket, rugby (football) or get on a school's athletic squad and who consequently tend to get complexes. The other boys tease them and call them 'sissies'. This is wrong.

"These boys could play golf where strength, while it is an asset, is not essential. And we could have inter-college matches."

Official games in South African boys' schools are generally limited to cricket, rugby and tennis. A few schools play soccer.

Piggish Pelican

In proportion to its weight, the pelican is the champion eater of the animal world. A pelican weighing only 18 pounds consumes four pounds of fish a day, or 222 pounds of food per 1,000 pounds. Pigs, on the other hand, consume only about 40 pounds of food per 1,000 pounds of weight.

"Say there!" called one intermission smoker to another across a Boardway theater lobby recently. "Aren't you Jean Kerr?" The pale woman grew paler still, and shuddered. "Heavens, no," said Jean Kerr firmly. "No, I most certainly am not!"

The entr'acte drama occurred in the lobby of the theater where Jean Kerr's Mary, Mary was running. Mrs. Kerr's instant denial of identity was not because she's reluctant about owning up to being a celebrity. It was simply, she said later, that "there I was in an old dress with a rip in my sweater and hair in my face -and I don't want anybody to think Jean Kerr looks like that."

Program May Help Industry

MEMPHIS, Tenn. -- "The $8 million program approved here would virtually double industry cotton research and promotion and give a mighty boost in our fight for markets," president Russell Giffen declared, following action by trustees of the Cotton Producers Institute.

The institute plans to conduct the projects under a grower-approved program authorizing uniform collection of $1 per bale for cotton research and promotion.

Giffen explained that the CPI program would be the nucleus of a total effort that represents several times the $8 million recommended for 1968.

"It would greatly expand and augment activities by CPI and by others that already are opening up many new opportunities for cotton and its products," he emphasized.

This over-all effort, he noted, includes the National Cotton Council, International Institute for Cotton, U. S. Department of Agriculture, land-grant colleges and private firms interested in cotton research.

Contributing substantially and likely to swell the total still further are matching funds from groups and businesses participating in cooperative research or promotion programs for cotton and cotton products.

The recommendations approved by Cotton Producers Institute for submission to the cotton board call for a budget of $2.7 million for research and $5.3 million for promotion.

The institute will utilize the staff and services of the National Cotton Council to carry out the projects.

Research recommendations cover 10 major areas. These include several of insects, weeds, and diseases; yield/quality; mechanization; processing/handling/marketing; mill finishing/processing; improvements in qualities important to consumers; product development, and cottonseed.

Promotion recommendations call for a substantial increase in CPI national magazine and newspaper advertising, in magazine--retailer projects and in manufacturer - retailer and trade advertising.

Proposed television projects include cooperative campaigns, fashion shows and movies.

Recommendations also covered six major merchandising areas: chain store and mail order, fabric libraries, market-press weeks, fabric development, retail sales training and suppliers and industry.

Cooperative campaign recommendations included increased promotion for cotton cushioning, canvas awnings, tarpulins and tentings and piece goods.

Marvin Purdy Attends Workshop

Marvin Purdy, regional manager from Sikeston for New American Life Insurance Company, attended a workshop for the company's representatives June 23 and 24 in Columbia.

Purdy was one of 40 representatives attending. Selected individuals were invited from Missouri, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

The workshop was part of a series of semi-annual sessions in which field representatives are given new materials, and they review material under current use.

New American Life is part of the Silvey Corporation which also owns three casualty companies; Tri-State, Farmers and Merchants and Midwestern. Corporate home office and New American Life home office are in Columbia.

Piggish Pelican

In proportion to its weight, the pelican is the champion eater of the animal world. A pelican weighing only 18 pounds consumes four pounds of fish a day, or 222 pounds of food per 1,000 pounds. Pigs, on the other hand, consume only about 40 pounds of food per 1,000 pounds of weight.

"Say there!" called one intermission smoker to another across a Boardway theater lobby recently. "Aren't you Jean Kerr?" The pale woman grew paler still, and shuddered. "Heavens, no," said Jean Kerr firmly. "No, I most certainly am not!"

The entr'acte drama occurred in the lobby of the theater where Jean Kerr's Mary, Mary was running. Mrs. Kerr's instant denial of identity was not because she's reluctant about owning up to being a celebrity. It was simply, she said later, that "there I was in an old dress with a rip in my sweater and hair in my face -and I don't want anybody to think Jean Kerr looks like that."

Y. A. Tittle of the New York football Giants told of a surprising thing that happened to him when he played his last game for the San Francisco Forty-Niners. The opposition on that day was the Giants, and Y. A. couldn't figure out how he was riddling the Giant defense with pass after pass. After the game he called one of the Giant linemen over and said, "What's the matter with you gusy? You all getting soft?"

"Naw," grunted the burly bone-crusher. "They told us all before the game that you'd just been traded to us and not to lay a hand on you."

During World War II, Adm. Arleigh Burke had a habit of spicing up the covers of his orders with sketches of pretty girls. Adm. Ernest J. King once confronted him. "Just look at this thing. It's terrible. It lacks dignity."

"Have you read Admiral Turner's op - order on the amphibious forces?" asked Burke.

"No," said King. "But you've read ours?" Burke persisted.

"Yes," King owned.

"That's the reason for the pretty girls on the cover," Burke crowed. "All of our op - orders are read. Nobody reads Admiral Turner's." John J. McAlcer

BENTON -- Americans are eating better than ever, and spending a small proportion of their after-tax dollar to do it.

Way back in the 1870's food took 58 per cent of all the consumer earned. Now the figure is 18.2 per cent of disposable income -- the lowest in history.

Consumers now spend less than a nickel of every quarter of their disposable income for food. Of this amount, the farmers get less than 2 cents.

Per capita consumption of meat this year is being estimated at 165 pounds -- including 100 pounds of beef, five pounds of veal, 3-1/2 pounds of lamb and 56-1/2 pounds of pork.

Today's consumer spends 18.2 cents of each after-tax dollar for food. This compares with 29 cents in England, 31 cents in France, 45 cents in Italy and 53 cents in Russia.

In the United States, one farmer or rancher produces enough food and fiber for 35 other people.

The cost of individual food items in terms of labor required to purchase them shows a substantial reduction since 1947. For example, an hour of labor today purchases about 70 per cent more beef and about 75 per cent more pork than it did then.

Today, annual meat expenditures for a family of five takes less than 5 per cent of total disposable income, for which they can purchase 850 pounds of meat --200 pounds more than in 1936. And in 1936, meat purchases took a larger percentage of annual income.

Today's factory worker earns the cost of his monthly grocery basket in less than 37 hours, the smallest number of hours in history. Fifteen years ago it took him 70 hours.

Where does the food dollar go? A big share goes to labor. Of the total cost of moving food from farmer to housewife, age earners in the food industry get an estimated 50 per cent.

SLIME MOLD

There have been a number of inquiries in regard to spots in lawns that have a growth on the grass that sheds a sooty black powder. The cause of this particular growth on the lawn grass is a fungus known as Slime Mold.

It is a primitive type of fungus and is generally regarded as a harmless saprophyte living on decaying organic matter, frequently old logs and leaves. In years when we have a great deal of rainfall and moist, humid weather this mold often grows up the stalks of the grass.

The black bodies that are apparent on the grass blades are the fruiting structures of the fungus. The masses of black powder that are shed when one walks through the area are the spores. These are the structures that provide survival when adverse weather occurs, states Einar W. Palm, Extension Plant Pathologist, University of Missouri.

The mold is made up of a slimy type of material that grows on the ground surface. In wet weather it will proceed up the surface of grass or other vegetation. When the weather conditions become adverse for the new growth of this slimy structure, known as the plasmodium, the fruiting structures are formed.

There are several species of slime mold. We have also had specimens of strawberries with slime mold infections.

The slime molds are not generally considered a serious pest. They are unsightly and undesirable in the yard, or garden and they may alter the activity of the leaves and result in some yellowing of the leaves. They at times predispose plants to invasion by other bacteria or fungi. They usually disappear rapidly as soon as it becomes dry.

Under most conditions slime molds are easily controlled by certain management practices. Generally speaking, removal of the spore material by mowing and/or washing the leaves with a stream of water have been standard recommendations for control of slime molds for many years.

However, slime mold development is favored by wet weather. If the leaves are washed during a prolonged period of high rainfall, this will only serve to spread the mold to previously unifected areas and thus promote a build up of disease.

Leaf washing for slime mold control should be performed only upon termination of humid, wet weather conditions.

When prevailing weather conditions do not permit leaf washing, mechanical removal of spore masses by raking, brushing, or cutting rather closely will reduce the disease. If wet weather persists, slime molds may be effecitvely controlled by the application of any good turf grass fungicide. Fungicides such as captan, dyrene, thiram, or zineb will be acceptable.

WHEAT AS SUBSTITUTE

Corn has long been recognized as the "king of the cereal grains" for livestock feeding. The cost of corn has risen to the point where consideration should be given to possible substitutes. Wheat, on the other hand, has decreased in price as a result of farm programs and price support changes. This has caused producers to ask when it is feasible to substitute wheat for all or part of the corn in the ration.

The University of Illinois states that wheat is approximately 95 per cent the value of corn. The University of Missouri feels that wheat is 100-105 per cent the value of corn and that they can be substituted on a pound-for-pound basis. A bushel of wheat would be worth about 7 per cent more than a bushel of corn, since it is 4 lbs. heavier.

WHEAT FOR CATTLE

Wheat can be used very satisfactorily as a part of the grain source for feeding cattle, but should probably supply no more than 50 per cent of the concentrate source. Cattle do not like wheat as well as corn and they tend to bloat or go off feed more often when they are fed wheat, in comparison to corn.

Mo. Bulletin 641, "Corn Substitutes for Fattening Cattle," reported a feeding trial involving wheat vs. corn for fattening yearling steers. The best performing group in this test was a group being fed equal parts corn with equal parts wheat as a grain source in the fattening ration.

The poorest gaining group was fed ground wheat as the only grain. They had frequent digestive disturbances and carcasses of relatively low grade.

Wheat should be rolled or coarsely ground for cattle. It should not be too fine or dust.

WHEAT FOR HOGS

Good quality ground wheat makes a very satisfactory feed for swine. Wheat can be substituted 100 per cent for corn in swine rations; however, the substitution should probably be done slowly. It may be wise to substitute approximately 50 per cent wheat for 50 per cent of the corn in the ration and then evaluate the performance obtained at this level before making an additional increase in the percentage of wheat in the ration.

Wheat is approximately 13 per cent C. P. and the question arises if it can be used as the only feed for a swine finishing ration requiring 12 per cent protein. The protein in cereal grains is of poorer quality than the protein in oilmeal products. This is primarily because of a deficiency in certain amino acids.

Therefore, even though wheat alone would provide an adequate crude protein percentage, the ration would still be deficient in some essential animo acids.

A finishing ration of 88 per cent corn and 12 per cent soybean oilmeal will supply adequate amounts of each of the essential amino acids. However, if wheat is used as the only feed in the ration, there will be a deficiency in lysine and methionine.

To correct the amino acid deficiencies, a finishing ration of 90-95 per cent wheat plus 5-10 per cent of a 40 per cent supplement should be satisfactory. Wheat may be self - fed free choice.

What varieties differ a great deal in amount of essential amino acids; therefore, use of averages may result in inaccuracy.

If the percentage protein is reduced in a ration when wheat replaces corn, it should probably be limited to a finisher ration with pigs on pasture and should probably not be more than 2 per cent below the level recommended for corn.

Extra fine grinding should be avoided with meat for hogs as well as cattle.

Wheat is deficient in about the same nutrients as corn for hogs; therefore, approximately the same levels of minerals and vitamins need to be added to a wheat ration (more vitamin A may be needed).

WHEAT FOR LAMBS

Wheat has not been satisfactory a feed as corn for lambs. It has been worth about 85 per cent as much as corn per pound in lamb feed, or 90 per cent as much a bushel.

SUMMARY

Generally speaking, when the price of wheat per bushel is equal to or less than the price of a bushel of corn, wheat should be given consideration as a concentrate source. As indicated previously, wheat is worth about 7 per cent more a bushel than corn, since there are 60 pounds in a bushel of wheat and 56 pounds in a bushel of corn.

However, if you are feeding shelled corn you must take into consideration that wheat should be either coarsely ground or rolled before it is fed to cattle, and also coarsely ground before, it is fed to hogs.

Because of the expense of grinding, wheat and corn become basically equal in value per bushel. If corn is being ground or in some other way prepared for feeding hogs or cattle, then wheat would remain 7 per cent greater in value per bushel than corn.

For example, a local elevator is quoting shelled corn grade no. 2 picked up at the elevator at $1.39 a bushel. The price for wheat in this area ranges from $1.30, to $1.40 a bushel.

With corn at $1.39 a bushel (2.48 a pound) and assuming it can be substituted on an equal basis with wheat, then wheat should be worth $1.49 a bushel as a feed source.

If adjustment is made for the additional protein that wheat supplies, then the price differential would increase even more. Some cattle and hog feeders will harvest wheat, haul it to the elevator, sell it for approximately $1.25 a bushel, and return with a load of corn to feed their cattle or hogs. These feeders need to be aware of the possibility of using wheat instead of corn.

Ann Landers

Life with Father Teenage Problem

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 16-year-old girl with a 42-year-old problem, my father.

I have always been a good student, dependable, honest and hard - working. I have never been in any kind of trouble, and I don't plan on getting into any. I began dating at 15 and I have never broken a curfew or gone anyplace where I should not have gone.

Yet my father does not trust me with a boy no matter who he is. Every time I come home from a date I get the third degree and a lecture. I have heard the same speech at least 50 times. My father thinks all boys become sex maniacs at the age of 16.

I have heard it said that fathers who worry most about their daughters are the ones who chased everything in skirts when they were teen-agers. Is this true? I need your help. --- NO FAITH

Dear Faith: It's a waste of time to speculate about what your father did when he was a teen-ager. The important thing is that he does allow you to date, so be thankful for small favors, Chicken. Listen to his lectures, continue to keep your record perfect and prove him wrong, wrong, wrong, wrong.

Dear Ann Landers: I hope you will print this letter for the woman who has had a good marriage for 10 years but can't get her high school sweetheart off her mind. Her letter was the story of my life.

I got a divorce, gave up two children and thought I was going to live happily ever after with my "great love." The last three years have been hell. I see none of the glamor and romance I was sure was there. I see only a cold, selfish man who leaves me emotionally starved. Furthermore, I had to go to work to keep the bill collectors off our necks. Just sign me --- DREAMER WHO WOKE UP TOO LATE.

Dear Dreamer: I hope the hundreds of women who wrote to tell me that they, too, are eating their hearts out for an old flame will take a page out of your book before they get burned --- as you did.

Dear Ann Landers: Mazie and I have been best friends for years. She began to date Eddie eight months ago. I always admired his sharp mind and wonderful wit. Mazie never treated him right and about six weeks ago they broke up.

When Eddie called me for a date I told him I'd feel like a rat going out with him because of my friendship with Mazie. He assured me that they were kaput, so I said I would have to talk to Mazie myself before I gave him an answer.

When I asked Mazie how she stood with Eddie she told me it was over and I should date him if I wanted to.

Eddie and I have had three dates an we get along beautifully. But yesterday Mazie called and said she made a mistake and she wants Eddie back. I told her I didn't have him in chains and she was welcome to him. Her reply was, "He is too much of a gentleman to dump you. You'll have to dump him."

I want to do the right thing. What is it? --- MISS IN THE MIDDLE

Dear Miss: If Mazie called you, it's a safe bet she also called Eddie. Refuse to play a three-handed game. Continue to see Eddie as long as you enjoy his company -- and make it a rule never to discuss one with the other.

Do you feel ill at ease . . .out of it? Is everybody having a good time but you? Write for Ann Landers' booklet, "The Key to Popularity," enclosing with your request 35¢ in coin and a long, self - addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a stamped, self - addressed envelope.

The Prayer
From The Upper Room

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . that they may rest from their labors, for their deeds follow them!" (Revelations 14;13, RSV)

PRAYER: Our Father, we love Thee and rest in Thy love. Grant that we may walk with Thee today and do the work Thou hast given us to do. Help us to so live in Thy presence that we may be glad to hear Thy call some day to come to Thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Bundle of Nerves Results in Lawsuit

By Jack Strauss, LL.B.

Nervous Norton felt shakier than usual and, going to a doctor, received two prescriptions which he took to a drug store to have filled. When he finally received them, one was marked "for external use only" and the other was labled "for internal use only."

A week later, the druggist was as nervous as Norton when he telephoned Norton to report a "slight" error. It seemed that he had inadvertently reversed the labels.

Dropping the telephone like he had just been stabbed, Norton clenched his throat and began to mumble that he was a dead man; that he had drunk the medicine marked "for external use only."

Instead of keeling over, however, Norton sued the druggist for damages.

"Because of his carelessness in mislabeling the bottles," Norton complained to a judge, "I developed an ulcer from fear that I might die. And, with the pain from the ulcer, the fact is I might be better off dead."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make the druggist pay for Norton's ulcer?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that Norton's ulcer did not develop as a result of the druggist's carelessness in mislabeling the prescription. Rather, it developed from being told that the bottles had been mislabeled.

BENTON -- Americans are eating better than ever, and spending a small proportion of their after-tax dollar to do it.

Way back in the 1870's food took 58 per cent of all the consumer earned. Now the figure is 18.2 per cent of disposable income -- the lowest in history.

Consumers now spend less than a nickel of every quarter of their disposable income for food. Of this amount, the farmers get less than 2 cents.

Per capita consumption of meat this year is being estimated at 165 pounds -- including 100 pounds of beef, five pounds of veal, 3-1/2 pounds of lamb and 56-1/2 pounds of pork.

Today's consumer spends 18.2 cents of each after-tax dollar for food. This compares with 29 cents in England, 31 cents in France, 45 cents in Italy and 53 cents in Russia.

In the United States, one farmer or rancher produces enough food and fiber for 35 other people.

The cost of individual food items in terms of labor required to purchase them shows a substantial reduction since 1947. For example, an hour of labor today purchases about 70 per cent more beef and about 75 per cent more pork than it did then.

Today, annual meat expenditures for a family of five takes less than 5 per cent of total disposable income, for which they can purchase 850 pounds of meat --200 pounds more than in 1936. And in 1936, meat purchases took a larger percentage of annual income.

Today's factory worker earns the cost of his monthly grocery basket in less than 37 hours, the smallest number of hours in history. Fifteen years ago it took him 90 hours.

Where does the food dollar go? A big share goes to labor. Of the total cost of moving food from farmer to housewife, age earners in the food industry get an estimated 50 per cent.

SLIME MOLD

There have been a number of inquiries in regard to spots in lawns that have a growth on the grass that sheds a sooty black powder. The cause of this particular growth on the lawn grass is a fungus known as Slime Mold.

It is a primitive type of fungus and is generally regarded as a harmless saprophyte living on decaying organic matter, frequently old logs and leaves. In years when we have a great deal of rainfall and moist, humid weather this mold often grows up the stalks of the grass.

The black bodies that are apparent on the grass blades are the fruiting structures of the fungus. The masses of black powder that are shed when one walks through the area are the spores. These are the structures that provide survival when adverse weather occurs, states Einar W. Palm, Extension Plant Pathologist, University of Missouri.

The mold is made up of a slimy type of material that grows on the ground surface. In wet weather it will proceed up the surface of grass or other vegetation. When the weather conditions become adverse for the new growth of this slimy structure, known as the plasmodium, the fruiting structures are formed.

There are several species of slime mold. We have also had specimens of strawberries with slime mold infections.

The slime molds are not generally considered a serious pest. They are unsightly and undesirable in the yard, or garden and they may alter the activity of the leaves and result in some yellowing of the leaves. They at times predispose plants to invasion by other bacteria or fungi. They usually disappear rapidly as soon as it becomes dry.

Under most conditions slime molds are easily controlled by certain management practices. Generally speaking, removal of the spore material by mowing and/or washing the leaves with a stream of water have been standard recommendations for control of slime molds for many years.

However, slime mold development is favored by wet weather. If the leaves are washed during a prolonged period of high rainfall, this will only serve to spread the mold to previously unifected areas and thus promote a build up of disease.

Leaf washing for slime mold control should be performed only upon termination of humid, wet weather conditions.

When prevailing weather conditions do not permit leaf washing, mechanical removal of spore masses by raking, brushing, or cutting rather closely will reduce the disease. If wet weather persists, slime molds may be effecitvely controlled by the application of any good turf grass fungicide. Fungicides such as captan, dyrene, thiram, or zineb will be acceptable.

WHEAT AS SUBSTITUTE

Corn has long been recognized as the "king of the cereal grains" for livestock feeding. The cost of corn has risen to the point where consideration should be given to possible substitutes. Wheat, on the other hand, has decreased in price as a result of farm programs and price support changes. This has caused producers to ask when it is feasible to substitute wheat for all or part of the corn in the ration.

The University of Illinois states that wheat is approximately 95 per cent the value of corn. The University of Missouri feels that wheat is 100-105 per cent the value of corn and that they can be substituted on a pound-for-pound basis. A bushel of wheat would be worth about 7 per cent more than a bushel of corn, since it is 4 lbs. heavier.

WHEAT FOR CATTLE

Wheat can be used very satisfactorily as a part of the grain source for feeding cattle, but should probably supply no more than 50 per cent of the concentrate source. Cattle do not like wheat as well as corn and they tend to bloat or go off feed more often when they are fed wheat, in comparison to corn.

Mo. Bulletin 641, "Corn Substitutes for Fattening Cattle," reported a feeding trial involving wheat vs. corn for fattening yearling steers. The best performing group in this test was a group being fed equal parts corn with equal parts wheat as a grain source in the fattening ration.

The poorest gaining group was fed ground wheat as the only grain. They had frequent digestive disturbances and carcasses of relatively low grade.

Wheat should be rolled or coarsely ground for cattle. It should not be too fine or dust.

WHEAT FOR HOGS

Good quality ground wheat makes a very satisfactory feed for swine. Wheat can be substituted 100 per cent for corn in swine rations; however, the substitution should probably be done slowly. It may be wise to substitute approximately 50 per cent wheat for 50 per cent of the corn in the ration and then evaluate the performance obtained at this level before making an additional increase in the percentage of wheat in the ration.

Wheat is approximately 13 per cent C. P. and the question arises if it can be used as the only feed for a swine finishing ration requiring 12 per cent protein. The protein in cereal grains is of poorer quality than the protein in oilmeal products. This is primarily because of a deficiency in certain amino acids.

Therefore, even though wheat alone would provide an adequate crude protein percentage, the ration would still be deficient in some essential animo acids.

A finishing ration of 88 per cent corn and 12 per cent soybean oilmeal will supply adequate amounts of each of the essential amino acids. However, if wheat is used as the only feed in the ration, there will be a deficiency in lysine and methionine.

To correct the amino acid deficiencies, a finishing ration of 90-95 per cent wheat plus 5-10 per cent of a 40 per cent supplement should be satisfactory. Wheat may be self - fed free choice.

What varieties differ a great deal in amount of essential amino acids; therefore, use of averages may result in inaccuracy.

If the percentage protein is reduced in a ration when wheat replaces corn, it should probably be limited to a finisher ration with pigs on pasture and should probably not be more than 2 per cent below the level recommended for corn.

Extra fine grinding should be avoided with meat for hogs as well as cattle.

Wheat is deficient in about the same nutrients as corn for hogs; therefore, approximately the same levels of minerals and vitamins need to be added to a wheat ration (more vitamin A may be needed).

WHEAT FOR LAMBS

Wheat has not been satisfactory a feed as corn for lambs. It has been worth about 85 per cent as much as corn per pound in lamb feed, or 90 per cent as much a bushel.

SUMMARY

Generally speaking, when the price of wheat per bushel is equal to or less than the price of a bushel of corn, wheat should be given consideration as a concentrate source. As indicated previously, wheat is worth about 7 per cent more a bushel than corn, since there are 60 pounds in a bushel of wheat and 56 pounds in a bushel of corn.

However, if you are feeding shelled corn you must take into consideration that wheat should be either coarsely ground or rolled before it is fed to cattle, and also coarsely ground before, it is fed to hogs.

Because of the expense of grinding, wheat and corn become basically equal in value per bushel. If corn is being ground or in some other way prepared for feeding hogs or cattle, then wheat would remain 7 per cent greater in value per bushel than corn.

For example, a local elevator is quoting shelled corn grade no. 2 picked up at the elevator at $1.39 a bushel. The price for wheat in this area ranges from $1.30, to $1.40 a bushel.

With corn at $1.39 a bushel (2.48 a pound) and assuming it can be substituted on an equal basis with wheat, then wheat should be worth $1.49 a bushel as a feed source.

If adjustment is made for the additional protein that wheat supplies, then the price differential would increase even more. Some cattle and hog feeders will harvest wheat, haul it to the elevator, sell it for approximately $1.25 a bushel, and return with a load of corn to feed their cattle or hogs. These feeders need to be aware of the possibility of using wheat instead of corn.

Y. A. Tittle of the New York football Giants told of a surprising thing that happened to him when he played his last game for the San Francisco Forty-Niners. The opposition on that day was the Giants, and Y. A. couldn't figure out how he was riddling the Giant defense with pass after pass. After the game he called one of the Giant linemen over and said, "What's the matter with you gusy? You all getting soft?"

"Naw," grunted the burly bone-crusher. "They told us all before the game that you'd just been traded to us and not to lay a hand on you."

Television Age

During World War II, Adm. Arleigh Burke had a habit of spicing up the covers of his orders with sketches of pretty girls. Adm. Ernest J. King once confronted him. "Just look at this thing. It's terrible. It lacks dignity."

"Have you read Admiral Turner's op - order on the amphibious forces?" asked Burke. "No," said King. "But you've read ours?" Burke persisted. "Yes," King owned.

"That's the reason for the pretty girls on the cover," Burke crowed. "All of our op - orders are read. Nobody reads Admiral Turner's." John J. McAlcer

Ann Landers

Life with Father Teenage Problem

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 16-year-old girl with a 42-year-old problem, my father.

I have always been a good student, dependable, honest and hard - working. I have never been in any kind of trouble, and I don't plan on getting into any. I began dating at 15 and I have never broken a curfew or gone anyplace where I should not have gone.

Yet my father does not trust me with a boy no matter who he is. Every time I come home from a date I get the third degree and a lecture. I have heard the same speech at least 50 times. My father thinks all boys become sex maniacs at the age of 16.

I have heard it said that fathers who worry most about their daughters are the ones who chased everything in skirts when they were teen-agers. Is this true? I need your help. --- NO FAITH

Dear Faith: It's a waste of time to speculate about what your father did when he was a teen-ager. The important thing is that he does allow you to date, so be thankful for small favors, Chicken. Listen to his lectures, continue to keep your record perfect and prove him wrong, wrong, wrong, wrong.

Dear Ann Landers: I hope you will print this letter for the woman who has had a good marriage for 10 years but can't get her high school sweetheart off her mind. Her letter was the story of my life.

I got a divorce, gave up two children and thought I was going to live happily ever after with my "great love." The last three years have been hell. I see none of the glamor and romance I was sure was there. I see only a cold, selfish man who leaves me emotionally starved. Furthermore, I had to go to work to keep the bill collectors off our necks. Just sign me --- DREAMER WHO WOKE UP TOO LATE.

Dear Dreamer: I hope the hundreds of women who wrote to tell me that they, too, are eating their hearts out for an old flame will take a page out of your book before they get burned --- as you did.

Dear Ann Landers: Mazie and I have been best friends for years. She began to date Eddie eight months ago. I always admired his sharp mind and wonderful wit. Mazie never treated him right and about six weeks ago they broke up.

When Eddie called me for a date I told him I'd feel like a rat going out with him because of my friendship with Mazie. He assured me that they were kaput, so I said I would have to talk to Mazie myself before I gave him an answer.

When I asked Mazie how she stood with Eddie she told me it was over and I should date him if I wanted to.

Eddie and I have had three dates an we get along beautifully. But yesterday Mazie called and said she made a mistake and she wants Eddie back. I told her I didn't have him in chains and she was welcome to him. Her reply was, "He is too much of a gentleman to dump you. You'll have to dump him."

I want to do the right thing. What is it? --- MISS IN THE MIDDLE

Dear Miss: If Mazie called you, it's a safe bet she also called Eddie. Refuse to play a three-handed game. Continue to see Eddie as long as you enjoy his company -- and make it a rule never to discuss one with the other.

Do you feel ill at ease . . .out of it? Is everybody having a good time but you? Write for Ann Landers' booklet, "The Key to Popularity," enclosing with your request 35¢ in coin and a long, self - addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a stamped, self - addressed envelope.

The Prayer
From The Upper Room

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . that they may rest from their labors, for their deeds follow them!" (Revelations 14:13, RSV)

PRAYER: Our Father, we love Thee and rest in Thy love. Grant that we may walk with Thee today and do the work Thou hast given us to do. Help us to so live in Thy presence that we may be glad to hear Thy call some day to come to Thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Instead of keeling over, however, Norton sued the druggist for damages.

"Because of his carelessness in mislabeling the bottles," Norton complained to a judge, "I developed an ulcer from fear that I might die. And, with the pain from the ulcer, the fact is I might be better off dead."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make the druggist pay for Norton's ulcer?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that Norton's ulcer did not develop as a result of the druggist's carelessness in mislabeling the prescription. Rather, it developed from being told that the bottles had been mislabeled.

AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION ABC
One in a series of messages to advertisers

No myths or mysteries, just the facts

The finest advertising doesn't have a chance unless it is seen or heard. The circulation of an advertisement is vital to its success. And, circulation is people ...not the number of advertisements printed or anticipated or projected.

No advertiser can afford expensive guessing. Positive proof of circulation should be demanded. Vague generalities should be discounted. Charts, formulas, and promises are not readers, and can lead your advertising off sales target.

The actual circulation figures...verified count...of this newspaper are available through the report of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Exactly how many units of your advertising are delivered into the hands of paying customers? How much do they pay to see your advertising? Where and how is this advertising being delivered?

This is the type of circulation information that helps keep your advertising and advertising budget aimed in the right direction. No camouflage, just facts and figures.

Insist on circulation proof when you buy advertising—be ABC-sure.
